GREETING

THE SHAWNEE COUNTY Honor Roll was conceived, the necessary material gathered, and the book published that the people of this county might have a permanent record of their total activities as called forth by the great World War.

The brave lads who fought "over there," those equally sincere who were left in camps at home, and the loyal ones who stood behind them all, each have attained a niche in world history. If, in years to come, this book calls forth a mirrored image of the stirring days of 1917-18, its publishers will have considered their work worth while.

THE UNITED STATES CAPITOL BUILDING AT MIDNIGHT
Washington, D. C.

This picture was made at midnight of April 5, 1917. Congress had been in session all day, debating the resolution to declare war on Germany, the session continuing until 3 o'clock A. M. when the Act was passed, the President signing the Declaration the same day.

A heavy rain, which had been falling just previous to the time the picture was made, formed a pool of water in a neglected depression in the pavement, making possible the beautiful reflection in the foreground.

SHAWNEE COUNTY'S RECORD

SHAWNEE COUNTY stands out as one of the banner counties of the State of Kansas in respect to the manner in which its citizens rose to meet every situation called forth by the exigencies of the late war. During the Liberty Loan Drives, the sale of Thrift Stamps, and the Red Cross and War Fund Drives the promptness with which the various quotas were subscribed to made this fact very evident. Over-subscriptions were the rule rather than the exception, and the county as a whole can proudly look back on its activities during those stirring times when democracy trembled in the balance to fall one way or another unless borne alike by the brave lads on the battlefields of France as well as the loved ones at home.

One example may be very readily taken up to show how well Shawnee County met every test given it by the needs of War. The sale of Thrift Stamps or War Savings Stamps for the county exceeded the quota by $50,000.00, showing how efficiently the work was carried forward. Every possible agency was mobilized for action during the War Savings Campaign of 1918, according to Charles S. Elliott, director of the Shawnee County Savings Committee. Their efficiency was proven by the fact that an average of ten war savings stamps for every man, woman and child in the county was sold during the year. While the Topeka postoffice led in the sale of the stamps, yet the Boy Scouts and the schools helped very materially in achieving the results obtained. The interest taken by the principals and teachers of the schools had a wonderful effect upon the minds of the children and in that way practically every home was reached, no matter what the circumstances of the family might be.

Log of the 35th Division

From the Time the Middle West Division Left Camp Doniphan to the War's End

ON THE Atlantic seabord, the division was assembled at Camp Mills, near Hempstead, Long Island, and on April 24 and 25 the Middle Westerners, many of them smelling salt water for the first time, moved over to New York and Hoboken, "set a foot aboard a ship" and sailed away on the great adventure.

The 60th Brigade of Field Artillery, its ammunition train, the Trench Mortar Battery and the 110th Field Signal Battalion were not with the division. They were to cross later.

It was a cold, windy trip on a boisterous sea. One convoy of great ships carried the division, and the submarine war was at its height. The convoy was routed far to the north so that at one time it was in the latitude of the southern point of Greenland. They turned southward when near the Scottish coast and passed through the Irish Sea between England and Ireland, and when Liverpool finally rose out of the water it got a cheer. That was May 7 and there was little sightseeing done in the British port, for the same day they were marched onto trains and shot through to Winchester.

FIRST DEATH OVERSEAS.

Cliff Berlin, an enlisted man, died of diphtheria in Winchester. His was the first death overseas in our outfit.

May 10 the division entrained again and rode to Southhampton, again embarked and in the night steamed down the Solent and through the submarine infested waters of the Channel safely to Le Havre, where they landed, May 11. Stories of submarine attacks have not been verified. There were plenty of alarms, however.

By 11 a. m. May 11 all outfits had landed on French soil or were in course of landing. It was just six months later to the hour that the armistice was signed.

QUARTERED 17 MILES FROM DIEPPE.

From Le Havre the troops moved as rapidly as possible immediately after landing to the vicinity of Eu, in which town divisional headquarters was set up in the town hall. Excepting the units to come later the division was assembled, finally, in France, and the war was not very far away. By June 1 the outfit was quartered within easy range of Eu. Le Treport, a peace time summer resort on the sea, but now a hospital center for convalescents, was three miles away. Dieppe was 17 miles to the southwest, and due east was the battle line.

These were parlous days in the great war. The enemy was pressing along the whole line, apparently feeling for a weak spot, and Foch could not know where he would strike. There was at that time no real American sector. We held a little stretch of trench up Lunecille way, and at a spot or two down in the Vosges we were in very quiet sectors. The British Army guarded the path to the Channel, while the great French legions stood watch and guard along the road that led to Paris.

WHEN HAIG FACED DISASTER.

The First Division already had tasted blood at Cantigny. Foch shuffled some other American divisions and put them into the line along with the French. The enemy was using a mobile force of 700,000 men, the intelligence section said. Foch knew he could stop them on the Marne. If the attack should slide farther to the west and north, the British would be in a bad way. At the direction of the high allied command Pershing lent all his forces in the training areas of the north of France to the British. There were nine divisions of them, one of which was the newly arrived Thirty-fifth. These were to be reserves to the British Army.

EQUIPPED WITH BRITISH RIFLES.

American newspapers at the time spoke of these American troops as having "finished their training" and of their being attached to the British Army. Their training really was not finished, but they had straightened out the kinks left by the long sea voyage; they had acquired a hurried, but acceptable, knowledge of the British rifle with which they were equipped, and they would have been able to put up a desperate fight if the British lines ever had given way. But they would have paid a terrific price, for they were not as capable then of taking the field as they were four months later, and the price paid at the later date was dear enough.

The parts of nine American divisions there exceeded in the aggregate one hundred and seventy-five thousand men. American newspapers at the time, I learn from the files, made their larger headlines day by day upon the gradual increase of enemy artillery fire on the British front. These nine divisions were gathered in the little corner at the north of France, and they lay, nearly all of them, in the territory west of a line drawn from Arras to Amiens.

Our 35th Division engineers were sent further north than any other elements of the 35th Division. There they dug reserve trenches, erected barbed wire entanglements and otherwise labored in the preparation of a line of defense to which the British could fall back if forced to do so, or into which some of the American reserves could be thrown to stop a rush to the channel. The enemy never reached that line. The infantry regiments got in some time at drill.

DIDN'T LIKE THE BRITISH.

When I returned from France early in March, 1919, it was on a ship which carried some fifteen hundred members of the 27th Division, formerly New

The 35th Division was formed in the fall of 1917, by combining the Kansas and Missouri National Guard troops, Kansas supplying approximately 8,000, Missouri 14,750, and the remainder obtained from draft contingents, bringing the division to 27,000 strength. Maj. Gen. William Wright commanded, and the training was done at Camp Doniphan, Fort Sill, Okla.

The division began entraining for the East April 11. Newspapers and everybody else knew of the troop movement, but nothing was printed. Attempted secrecy did not prevent the word spreading to the mothers and fathers back home, and there were immense throngs at the stations in Kansas City, St. Louis and intermediate points to watch their boys go through. Kansas City had many separate units in the division, considering it almost the same as an entirely "home unit."

York National Guardsmen. They had spent their entire service in France with the British, and the officers, almost to a man, declared that they liked the British very much, that relations always had been friendly, and several of the enlisted men with whom I talked had the same opinion. It is the duty of the veracious chronicler to record that the 35th Division did not get along very well with the British. They did not like the British noncoms, or the British soldiers, or the British officers. They conspicuously disliked the British rations, and they loathed tea for breakfast. It is almost impossible to make Missourians and Kansans drink tea for breakfast.

"But WE have ALWAYS drunk tea for breakfast," a British mess sergeant pleaded.

"Maybe that's what is the matter with you," the American mess sergeant answered.

There were occasional fights between our men and theirs. That did not aid in the cementing of the Entente. A British noncom who was a bit of a wag, heard an excellent wheeze at his own headquarters, and hurried to tell it to the Americans. He found three of them together on a sidewalk in Eu.

"I say you fellows! Did you know the next war is to be fought between the two yellow races? Yes, the Japanese and the Americans. Haw——"

All three Americans hit the jester at the same time, and gentle hands bore him away to a hospital.

STRUGGLE WITH FRENCH LANGUAGE.

It was in the region about Eu that we first began having our struggles with the French language. The name of the town was called by the natives something like "Uhr," but we called it "You" until we had heard some Frenchman pronounce it.

All men of the division could feel the approach to the war, and could get much of the atmosphere of it from long trains of camouflaged trucks which plugged along the magnificent roads, or from the hospital cars which the trains carried daily down to Le Treport, where sick or wounded might rest and recuperate by the sea, or from the airplanes which flew over in formation on their way to front or back again.

On the night of May 26 and the morning of May 27, the Germans attacked on a 40-mile front, between Rheims and Soissons, against the British and French, and the endeavor to extend the gains made in the March offensive was apparent. Then they attacked below Ypres. The 35th Division came mighty near to getting into the war then, but we knew at the time little about how close we were to participation. The battle developed rapidly along the Vesle and the Aisne and May 28 a crossing of the Aisne was made. The French from Reims westward braced themselves against the push and the foe slipped further westward.

The concentration of the attack along the line held by the French made it appear that the German design was to make another attempt on Paris, rather than toward the channel. The need for the 35th in the British area passed, and they were booked for other fields.

June 7 the 35th Division resumed its travels. The great enemy offensive was stopped. He lay along the Marne, and he could threaten the British, as he did a few days later around Montdidier, but between the German hordes and Paris lay the grim Frenchmen, whose confession of faith and declaration of principles and litany were all embraced in the phrase "They shall not pass." Foch could again devote his energies to arranging his forces for his offensive to come, and one of the details of this arrangement made it necessary for General Pershing to send the 35th Division further to the eastward.

Virtually all of the division had entrained at Eu or at other railroad points near there. On this journey, the men came to understand why someone had written "sunny France," for good weather attended through a beautiful green country.

The men rode in the famed "Hommes 40, chevaux 8," as the little French freight cars were universally called. The four-wheeled cars looked flimsy to eyes used to considering the big, sturdy American box cars, but when one of those long trains got under way it moved with a dash and a bound which gave a good idea of France at war.

Headquarters was next set up at Arches, which the natives called "Arsh," but which we usually referred to as "Archie." Elements of the division were scattered about the countryside, and some of them unloaded at the wrong places, so that they drew long hikes as the result.

GENERAL McCLURE BECOMES COMMANDER.

June 15 Major General Wright was put in command of a corps and he left the division. Brig. Gen. Nathaniel F. McClure, who had commanded the 69th Infantry Brigade since May 26, took over command of the division, and Colonel McMahon was acting commander of the brigade.

June 17, when the rain had commenced again, orders were received to prepare to move. June 17 also produced a big mail delivery and a payday. Altogether it was a large occasion.

The 2nd Battalion of the 138th had the honor of being the first unit in the 35th to go to the front. Maj. Norman B. Comfort commanded it and the companies were under Captains Hundley, Lloyd, McDonald and Christ. Seventy trucks carried the men on a day lit by brilliant sunshine. The course lay through Arches, and up the Valley of the Moselle.

At 5:55 p. m. the first truck passed through a tunnel at Bussang, and started down into a beautiful valley. They were now in the country which had been Germany up to the beginning of the war. The tunnel was the boundary line.

CHEERED BY ALSATIAN GIRLS.

Yellow-haired Alsatian girls from the dusty roadside shouted welcome, waved their hands hospitably and threw flowers into the trucks. The men were unanimous in the belief that it was a bully neighborhood to hold a war in, and everyone felt sure he was going to do well in this country.

In the town of Wesserling the men slept in a great barracks which formerly had been a German headquarters. The town was really a little city set high in the mountains, with good hotels, and many shops and little cafes scattered about. These received a flattering business from the boys, whose pockets held their first pay for three months.

That march on the night of June 19 from Wesserling to Bussat, though it was less than a year ago, is already beginning to take on the most and verdure of traditions. It was a killing hike on the men, who carried full packs up a switch back mountain road.

Each man carried more than sixty pounds of equipment, and some of them several pounds more. One man, I remember, quarreled and grumbled all night long about a 25-pound bag of machine gun ammunition which he had been detailed to carry. He was always just about to throw it away, and a dozen times he swore fervently that he would not carry it another step, even if they court-martialed him and shot him, but he arrived at camp at 4 the next morning with it. Private Bob Hoard carried his own pack and rifle, and the pack of his worn out bunkle. That was a classic feat of endurance and strength, for the distance was nearly ten miles, and it was up hill all the way.

AT LAST, THE GUNS!

The weariness and the gloomy forests along the mountain side, the occasional clouds which blew against the mountain or the dashes of rain all tended to dull the keenness of perception, but every man felt the thrill of war when, at some point in the black road, it became sure to him that the rumble of distant thunder was what he had half suspected all the time. It was The Guns. It had come at last. The War was just ahead.

Toward the end of the march the rumble disintegrated into its component sounds. The bellow of each gun could be heard and occasionally the valley would fill with a rush of sound as some big calibered piece turned loose.

In the days that followed, the 35th Division learned many things about war and how it is waged. In the De Galbert subsector, where the first men of the 35th went, they found the line held by a very tired French regiment, the 19th. It was a meeting of the East and the West, a joining and clashing of Old World ideas. These French had been but a few days in the Vosges, but they had been four years in the war. Our men had not been in the war yet, but they had been training for it nearly a year; they had sweat at Doniphan, had sailed thousands of perilous miles through the blue sea water, had ridden and trudged their way across France, and here they were at the trenches, in easy rifle range of the foe. So why not let the fighting begin?

"No, it is much better to lie quiet," the French commander said. "If we do not bother the boche the boche will not bother us, and we can rest and hold our ground."

"NO WAY TO WIN A WAR."

"Hell's fire and damnation," the Americans would reply. "That's no way to win a war. Let's go right through them! We can raid those trenches, drive the enemy back and, with proper artillery help, push right through to the Rhine Valley."

THE AMERICANS ARE IMPATIENT.

"But to what good end?" the patient French would ask. "The war will not be decided in these hopeless mountains. It is in the fertile valleys of the Somme, the Aisne and the Marne, it is in the Champagne and in Picardy that the war must be fought. The high command does not desire a battle here. The high command has many battles in progress with which to worry. We could do the boche no great harm even if we drove him out of the Vosges. These mountains have little strategic importance."

"Well, what sort of an old soldiers' home is this we have been sent to? We are not wood choppers or mountain goats. We did not come here looking for a pleasant resort to spend the summer."

"No, my men are not so old," the French commandant said. "I am not nearly as old as I look and in a little while we will be quite fresh again. Soon, I am sure, we will be withdrawn and our American comrades will be put in charge of this line of trenches. Then you can make battles at will. A week ago we were fighting on the Chemin des Dames. We lost 65 per cent of our men. The regiment lost forty-two officers, among them our colonel and two majors, killed. The lieutenant on your left was a sergeant yesterday. All that we wish to do here is to rest for a little while, show your troops the way about the trenches, receive our replacements, work them into our companies and then return to the great battle, wherever France needs us most."

WARM FRIENDSHIP QUICKLY FORMED.

The battalion slept in barracks at Bussat after they reached that camp about 4 in the morning after the great hike, rested the next day and at night two companies went into the trenches. The relief was a sort of half relief, as half of the French soldiers stayed in the front line. A strong point, for example, would be manned by sixteen French poilus. Eight of them came out and eight remained in. Eight Americans joined them.

Here a peculiar thing was observed. It was a dark night. The trenches were close together and no lights could be shown and there could be no talking except in whispers. Four Americans would be put in a dugout with four Frenchmen, a dark, wet place it was, and they would have no word of common speech. Four others would be assigned to stand sentry duty with four other Frenchmen. The next morning at breakfast time the warmest friendships would have been established. They slapped one another on the back and swapped cigarettes and pooled rations. It was a great night for the cordiale.

The trenches, as they were seen by the light of the following day, were far from charming. They had been located when the French made an advance into Alsace the first year of the war. When they stopped they dug in, and the gradual improvement of the defenses had built up the trench system. There was no such thing as parallel lines, and sometimes you could not tell exactly where the enemy's first line trench was. In front of our trenches was the inevitable tangle of barbed wire.

A BRIGADE IN LINE BY JULY 1.

By July 1 we had a brigade in line, under the command of the 33rd French Army Corps. The sector was called in proper military language "the Benoit and De Galbert subsectors of the north sector of the Wesserling sector," and its geographical location was east of the town of Wesserling. The regimental and brigade headquarters were in barracks and dugouts built by the French on the side of the mountains soon after they reconquered the territory three years before. Supplies were brought to the foot of the mountains by train, standard or narrow gauge, and the most of the rations came up the mountain side in the baskets of an aerial tramway which started from Kruth and ended at Bussat. From there wagons could haul the provisions to virtually all battalion and company headquarters, and those inaccessible in this way were served by pack mules.

Patches of forest spread about over the mountains. The pines, spruce and fir rose straight as arrows, sometimes a hundred feet. The side of the mountain would break into a precipiece and end in the wall of a canyon far below.

Quick rainstorms would blow up and clear away as quickly. After these squalls a sky of perfect blue would have a few fleecy white clouds scudding across it and a hot sun would fill the whole beautiful land. The wind, even in summer, usually blew fresh and keen.

A VIEW ACROSS THE GERMAN LINES.

Beyond the German lines we could look down into the little valleys and from the observation posts three little deserted Alsatian towns could be seen.

But at the trenches the beauty of the scene ended. The ground was bare of vegetation, there was the inevitable tangle of barbed wire in great profusion, like a heavy growth of some particularly venomous poison vine. It was all ugly and repulsive, as are most things in war.

We had great admiration for the French intelligence service when we learned how many of the German telephone and telegraph wires back on the German side of the trenches had been tapped. The second day after we had entered the trenches, the French commandant was notified that a message had been sent to the German rear from the front saying "The Americans entered the trenches at 3 o'clock in the morning." So we knew that they knew.

TAPPED AMERICAN WIRES.

It was not long until we knew that they had tapped our wires also. An American soldier was killed at midnight and headquarters notified. At noon another message was sent from the front saying that the body was being brought back. Headquarters replied that the funeral would be at 3 p. m. at the military cemetery.

At 3 o'clock precisely, the Germans shelled the cemetery. Then we knew they had our wires tapped.

For most of the first month the French corps kept the command, but by July 27 the French doubtless decided the outfit could stand alone, so they gave the Fecht sector into the general commanding the 35th. The area was that already held with the Garibaldi subsector added. Division headquarters were set up at Kruth, the new territory was taken in hand, and the recurring series of duty and rest were continued as before, except that rest periods were shortened. August 10 the south sector of the Gerardmer sector was added, and the whole stretch of line was called the sector of Gerardmer, at which beautiful place division headquarters established itself.

AMERICANS MAKE QUIET SECTOR ACTIVE.

When the 35th went into the Vosges trenches the 32nd Division, an excellent outfit, made up of national guardsmen of Michigan and Wisconsin, was already in to the south, near Belfort. The French and Germans had seemed to agree that the decision would be gained in the rich valleys to the northwest, the Marne, Meuse, Aire, Somme and such like fields of fame, so they sent tired troops to the Vosges to rest or filled the line with territorials. A few shells were sent over each day, a few infrequent raids were made at night, to learn what troops were opposite, wire was kept in good shape and trenches and dugouts were maintained in good repair, but little beyond this was done. The great war was allowed to rage elsewhere. No men were sacrificed in this part of the world.

The American changed all this. They had men to be trained, battalions to be blooded, schemes to try and nerves to test.

HIKE DAYS OF THE 35TH.

The months of July and August spent in the Vosges saw the culmination of the training period for the 35th, for, while it held sectors of trench, there was no quieter place along the line from Switzerland to the sea except when the Americans stirred up trouble. The real business of the Americans was to fit themselves for the big fight which they knew they would get into some day. The training in the Vosges was not of great value to the men in the Argonne battle. There they learned trench warfare, but that form of fighting was done. There were few places in the sector held by the division where it would have been possible to maneuver much more than a company of troops, and we were so near the enemy and under such constant observation that the few available open places could not be used, because such an assemblage of men would be sure to draw fire. Men in rest billets at the rear, where they went after a spell in the trenches, got some training, but it was not in the open warfare known of old.

LEFT 100 DEAD IN THE VOSGES.

But we left about one hundred of our men there in the foothills of the Alps. They were killed in action, died of wounds or of disease or accident. I had not realized the number was so large until I came to count them up. It shows how heavy is the toll even in the quietest of sectors.

THE 60TH ARTILLERY ARRIVES.

The 60th Field Artillery Brigade, which was a component of the 35th Division and which had enviously watched the infantry depart and leave the big guns behind, reached England about June 1. It landed in Liverpool and after a stop of a week, proceeded to France, landing at Le Havre, and proceeding June 12 to Angers, where it received its equipment. From there it went to Camp Coetquidan for training. Two months were put in there getting acquainted with the guns and perfecting technique, and August 14 the artillery joined up with the division, which then had headquarters at Gerardmer.

Up to that time all artillery behind the 35th had been French. Under the French system artillery units usually held their places in the mountains, because of the difficulty of moving guns into and out of the emplacements and because of the additional value a prolonged experience gave to the gunners in that difficult territory.

SANITARY TRAIN AND SIGNAL MEN ARRIVE.

The 110th Sanitary Train and the 110th Field Signal Battalion, though they had not traveled together, reached the division at the same time, June 12, and joined up at Arches.

Pleasant, easy or comfortable days for the 35th Division had now come to an end. The men had sworn mightily at the discomforts of the Vosges, and had been much disgusted with fighting above the clouds, sleeping in old French barracks and wearing overcoats in midsummer as the high altitude made necessary, a land where it was dusk as 9:30 p. m. and dawn at 3:30 a. m. They were also vexed with those absurd and unseen officers in high places who would not let them fight. They wanted to walk through the boche lines and right into Germany.

A war of action had developed in the Marne Valley while the 35th lay in the Vosges. The enemy had attacked June 15 and had been stopped. The Allied troops had attacked July 18 and for the first time in four years, things had a very roseate glow. General Pershing had applied for and obtained permission to reduce the salient above St. Mihiel.

What degree of resistance the Americans would meet and what forces would be necessary to overcome it was unknown, but it was to be an all-American affair and plenty of men, munitions and guns were provided to take the salient, however hard the enemy fought. Most of the divisions in the fighting were the older, well tried ones. In support were other divisions ready to enter the frey, while behind them was the reserve, ready to go to the needed point. The 35th Division was in the army reserve and its business was to be mobile and ready to strike wherever needed.

Of course, none of the men of the 35th and few of the officers had any idea of the operation to which they were assigned. Troop movements usually look very silly to the man in the ranks who has no knowledge of the underlying purpose. That is why confidence in higher officers is one of the best sustainers of morale. The soldier should be able to say, "Well, the old man is doing it, and he knows his business. I'm willing."

The St. Mihiel operation plans were guarded with great secrecy and knowledge of the purpose kept within a circle as restricted as possible. But our men suspected there was a hen on when the shuffling commenced.

IN SUPPORT AT ST. MIHIEL.

August 27, 28 and 29, those elements not in the line were grouped about the town of Gerardmer, and the 31st Division was relieved. The last elements came out the night of September 2, and on the 4th, 5th and 6th the division entrained for what was known vaguely as the Rosieres area. That first of September was a notable day, although it did not appear so at the time, for it was the last time the men were to sleep under cover for more than a month, and that month the most trying in their histories.

Few of the men had opportunity through that September to remove their clothing except to change underwear or socks. They were not able to do that often, possibly once or twice, for there was a chronic shortage of new stuff to change into. Very few of them had a bath that month.

Rosieres-aux-Salines proved to be a pretty good sort of town in a pretty little flat valley. Sections of the division were scattered about the countryside.

Then came days of waiting and policing and equipping and rain. Just about the time the pup tents were well set and drained and a fellow had a chance to make himself approximately comfortable there would come the order to march. Everything was done by night in that period, to avoid enemy observation, and the feeling that something was about to happen was heavy in the air.

The directors of the operation, sitting in conference back at Souilly, would look at their immense battle maps, and after calculating angles and distances for a while, one would say: "It seems to me the field would be better balanced if the reserve was a little further down the valley here," and that would be discussed and finally agreed to. "Do it," the commanding general would say. A code telegram would be started to the headquarters of the 35th Division, the pins indicating the reserve on the battle map moved and the conference would proceed.

CHANGING POSITIONS CONTINUALLY.

At headquarters of the 35th, as soon as the telegram was received, there would be much bustle and preparing of orders. Motor cycle orderlies would stream away in a deafening clatter, and soon in all the towns and fields where units of the 35th were stationed, pup tents would be coming down, blankets rolled, packs made up, and at the given hour the men would fall in and the long column take up again the same old hike.

It grew very, very tiresome, and the conviction that great things were soon to happen did not make the work easy or pleasant. There is a fearful monotony to marching, marching, marching. It is hard work. Making a pup ten of two shelter halves and setting it up in the rain is not a pleasant pastime, and there is a physical revulsion against the discomforts of living outdoors in the rain.

The march of the night of September 10-11 was into Tomblaine, at Jarville and Maron, which are suburbs of Nancy, but that beautiful city few of the men were able to see at that time. The next night the division marched again—through the edge of the city of Nancy and into the Foret de Haye, where they went into concealed bivouac.

Those were trying times. The roar of the guns seemed very near, and the men knew that a big fight was on close at hand, and it was quite impossible to rest easy. At night enemy airplanes came over and dropped bombs on the forest and a good part of the time it rained. The Missouri and Kansas doughboys found it difficult to comprehend the denseness of a commander who would let a good division like theirs lie out in the rain night after night and rust when there was a fight going on right close by that might just as well be in as not. Really, Pershing ought to know better.

As a matter of fact, the St. Mihiel affair proved very easy. The operation had been planned largely by Col. R. McCleave, former chief of staff of the 35th, and at that time chief of operations of the First Army. It was tactically perfect, and the toll of enemy prisoners alone was said to be more than four times our total casualties in the salient through which the Americans crashed at will. There was no occasion to call upon the reserves, who had to content themselves with being present with a "willingness to serve."

ITS PART OF ST. MIHIEL.

The part the 35th played was not big, but it was very important. General Pershing was able to order his combat battalions in whatever way he chose because he had a reserve behind them. The reserve is an essential part of the attacking force, even if it never moves a foot or fires a shot. The 35th Division was the salient, unseen force behind the line. It was ready to fill any gap the enemy might make, or to take the place of any weakening or shattered force in front of it.

I believe the division would have been better prepared for the Argonne fight if it had had a place in the line in the St. Mihiel operation. Its losses would have been light, and it would have then gone into the Argonne with battle experience, and with the assurance and confidence which the other divisions gained at St. Mihiel.

MOVE TOWARD THE ARGONNE.

September 15 new orders came, and the air began to charge again with the electricity of coming action. That night the division moved to the region about Charmentois. The most of the infantry moved in busses, those immense lumbering cars which were stripped from the streets of London and Paris at the beginning of the war, and which had rambled all over the north of France since, hauling soldiers to many threatened fields, carrying wounded back and at times playing the part of trucks and taking supplies forward.

In the Charmentois area the division came under the 3rd Army Corps, and, as a result, was in the 2nd French Army for tactical control and supply. At this stopping place, which also was out of doors, the air bombs grew more frequent.

The 69th Brigade moved up near Auzeville the night of September 19-20, and the next night the remainder of the division went to the neighborhood of Grace-le-Comte Farm and into the woods east of Beauchamp, where the division relieved the 73rd French Division in charge of the sector. Because of their familiarity with the sector and that the relief might not be noted by the enemy, the French outposts remained in position. There was a screen of French between the Americans and the enemy.

The 69th Brigade held the line, with the 70th in support. The formation was for each regiment of the 69th to have two of its three battalions in the line, each battalion having a machine gun company attached. One battalion and a machine gun company was in reserve ro each regiment. This formation was maintained up to the morning of September 26.

The division was now just behind the scenes, the stage was set and our actors ready. The 60th Brigade of Artillery was in its place, and tuning up its guns. That was about all they were allowed to do before the great artillery preparation began.

Our men did not take over the trenches, as they had done before when going into a sector. They were happily finished with trenches for all time.

COMING TO OPEN WARFARE.

A paragraph of recapitulation is in order here. This was a division of men who formerly belonged to the national guard, in which they had had a certain training in open warfare, the kind of war for which the American soldier is primarily, essentially and everlastingly fitted. They had not been more than a year in the federal service, undergoing intensive training, nearly all of which was designed to fit them for the peculiar conditions incident to the fixed and established conflict known as trench warfare.

Now the last battles of the war were about to begin and they were to be fought, as many persons had suspected they would be fought, out in the open.

IMPORTANCE OF ARGONNE OFFENSIVE.

The offensive started by American troops in the Argonne September 26 was a part of the great battle plan of General Foch. It was perhaps the most essential piece of the whole battle line of similar length.

At the conference of Allied leaders, when the great general attack was planned, the French commander-in-chief asked:

"Where will the American Army fight in this battle?"

"Wherever you wish it to fight," Pershing replied.

MENACED GERMAN COMMUNICATIONS.

Foch then indicated the line between the Meuse and the Argonne, and asked if they would take a part of the line. Pershing assented. It was the part of the line where the heaviest fighting undoubtedly would be if the battle plans worked out, and if the judgment of the military men proved true.

HOW THE 35TH WAS PLACED.

The battle order was considered a model of conciseness, but it was a voluminous thing at that. The advance was to be made by nine divisions on a sixteen-mile front at the same moment, 5:30 a. m., after artillery preparation of varying duration and density at various parts of the line. The 1st Army (American), which was under command of General Pershing in person, had three corps in the line, each composed of three divisions. The 1st Corps, to which the 35th was attached, was on the left. The 35th was the right hand of the corps. It had about two miles of front. On the 35th's left was its corps-mate, the 28th Division. On the 35th's right was the 91st Division of the 5th Corps.

The country lying in front of the 35th, and through which it was to advance, was as difficult as any on the American front, and in some ways the task was the most desperate of all. Two kilometers out from the stepping off place was the Hindenburg line most heavily wired and prepared for defense in every way the four years of war had taught the Germans. I am writing now of what was known before the battle.

Just in front of the Hindenburg line, the defensive works mingling with and making it part of the line, was Vauquois Hill, a place of sad and sanguinary memory. The French had never been able to retake it at the price they were willing to pay, and many troops had been lost in fruitless attempts. A high French officer told me their losses there probably totaled forty thousand. It was known to be thoroughly mined, to have excavations and tunnels of great length for quick communication and transferral of troops from one point to another. It had once been covered with trees for the most part, but these were now merely shattered stumps, so much artillery fire had been addressed to it.

The Ouvrage d'Aden was known to be a strong point alongside the secondary road, but the defenses before Cheppy do not seem to have been mapped.

Students of French history will remember that when the French revolution was brewing and occasionally becoming threatening, Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette endeavored to escape from France, and that they got as far as Varennes, where the postmaster's son, consulting the monarch's plume on a coin, recognized the royal fugitives and stopped the carriage at the bridge, turning them back to Paris and, eventually, to the executioner. The 35th Division's left flank was to go through Varennes and by the eastern end of the bridge. The 28th had the other side of the river.

The other towns we were to take, Cheppy, Very, Charpentry, Baulhy and Exermont, Fleville, etc., were typical French villages.

The course laid out for the 35th was in the valley of the Aire with occasional hills, and sufficient clumps of trees and brush to afford excellent cover for machine gun nests. As a rule, it was open country. The main road from Neuvilly to Varennes, and thence through Baulny to Exermont had been an excellent one, a national highway, before the war.

CHANGES IN OFFICERS.

Shortly before the battle radical changes were made in the officer personnel. Brig. Gen. Nathaniel F. McClure, who had commanded the division for more than a month in the Vosges, and who commanded the 69th Brigade up to September 21, was relieved on that date, and Brig. Gen. (then colonel) Louis M. Nuttman put in command Brig. Gen. Charles I. Martin, who had commanded the Kansas National Guard on the border and who had commanded the 70th Brigade since its formation, was relieved, also September 21, and he was replaced by Col. Kirby Walker. Lieut. Col. Channing E. Delaplane took command of the 140th Infantry September 22. Col. Frank Rumbold was relieved of his command of the 128th Field Artillery on September 24, two days before the fight; other changes were made.

The infantry was to advance in columns of brigades, with the 69th Brigade leading. The regiments were to advance abreast within the brigades, each with one battalion in the front line, one in support and one in reserve. From each of the two rear battalions two companies were sent forward and attached to the front battalions. Two of these were to mop up Vauquois Hill, and the other two were to perform a similar service for the Rosignol Wood.

MACHINE GUN UNITS PLACED.

The machine gun companies were scattered about in advantageous positions. One battalion and one company were in position on Hill 253, Mamelon Blanc and La Maize, a similar number were in position at Buzemont, two companies were in the rear of the support line ready to take position on Hill 239, while four companies were attached to the front line battalions ready for the advance.

A company of engineers was to go with the leading brigade to cut wire, two platoons were to accompany the moppers up, and one company, less one platoon, was to accompany the tanks. The 344th Tank Battalion was distributed along the front ready for the advance.

The First Aero Squadron was attached to the 35th Division for the action, and it was provided that at least one plane was to be constantly over the division sector. The 2nd Balloon Company also was attached to the division.

One squadron of cavalry was assembled south of Aubreville, with scouts assigned to accompany the rear elements of the infantry.

The 60th Field Artillery was re-enforced by the 219th R. A. C. and the 282nd, 317th and 451st R. A. L. and one battery of light artillery was to go with the advance to be used as forward guns. These are French artillery regiments, the first one light, the last three heavy.

Two days' "iron" (emergency) rations were served to all men, and the night of September 25 found everybody on his toes.

THE 35TH INTO BATTLE.

Nine American divisions were in the line ready to attack the night of September 25. They were divided into three corps. Each corps had, besides the nine in the line, a division in support and a division in reserve, so that we were fifteen divisions strong going into battle. Four hundred thousand American fighting men heard the artillery prelude to the attack. It was the greatest army America ever has sent onto the field.

The battle line extended from the Meuse River at a point a few kilometers above Verdun, westward to a point in the Argonne Forest, where it connected with the French 4th Army which was attacking on our left.

At 11:30 p. m., September 25, our artillery opened a deceptive diversion fire to the east of the Meuse and to the west of the Argonne Forest. Between these two active spots all the defenses against which the American were to move.

THE EVE OF BATTLE.

The 35th Division had been in the vicinity of Hesse the most of four days and nights. On the afternoon of the twenty-fifth, a large hot meal was served to the men. Afterward, all packs were ned and placed in a pile. Lieutenants commanding platoons called their sergeants and corporals together and explained the nature of the action which they were to fight the next day. Detail maps of the country were shown, and the noncoms instructed to fix as much of it in their memory as possible, but maps were not given to the noncoms.

The days and nights of waiting in the forest were under almost constant shell fire, and there had not been a great deal of sleeping done. After dark, the infantry moved forward through the woods in approximately the formation they were to employ the following day. The men lay down among the big guns and tried to sleep. Each one, according to orders, first loaded and locked his rifle.

EACH MAN HAD 250 ROUNDS.

Each infantryman carried his rifle, bayonet, steel helmet and gas mask. He had 250 rounds of rifle ammunition carried in a belt, and two bandoliers, each one swung over one shoulder and under the other arm. On his back was his combat pack, in his pack carrier. This contained his raincoat, if he was not wearing it, his mess kit and two days' "iron rations," which usually were two cans of corned beef and six boxes of hard bread. This is the improved form of the famed hardtack of the Civil War, and as issued now is a thick, hard cracker, palatable and full of nutrition. A few men had a loaf or half a loaf of the excellent white army bread, fresh from the bakery. This usually was carried on the fixed bayonet. All carried a full canteen of water, about a quart. Occasional details carried Stokes mortar ammunition, four shells to a man, each weighing 10 pounds and 11 ounces. Infantry also carried ordinary explosive grenadse, gas grenades, rifle grenades and incendiary grenadse, but the most of these were thrown away.

The cannonading, which commenced before midnight, was intended to deceive the enemy as to the place at which the attack was to come. It was hoped that he would assume it was to be east of Verdun or west of the Argonne, and that he would begin at once the work of shifting there some of the good divisions he was known to have back of the 16-mile front on which the Americans were to attack, and which lay between these two points.

FIRING 2,600 GUNS.

At 2:30 a. m. all the other artillery concentrated between the Meuse River and the Argonne Forest went into action.

All adjectives fail to give even a fair impression of the awful grandeur of such artillerying. No combination of words is effective. It seemed that for a while the lid of hell had been pushed back a little space. The long line on either hand leaped into flame, the horizon was lit by the bursting shells, and from the trenches where the enemy had lain so long there rose the many colored rockets with which he appealed to his guns for succor. What each signal meant I do not know, but they plentifully told the tale of his distress.

Twenty-six hundred guns were firing at 3 a. m., every one with a carefully laid out mission, and with the rest, the 60th Brigade of Field Artillery, 35th Division, delivered its quota of hardware as promptly as the seconds clicked off.

The men of the 35th got little sleep, and they had a hard day's work ahead. It was their first very big artillery action, and they were lying, figuratively, between the wheels of the guns. For three mortal hours the artillery pounded away. High explosives riddled the wire and destroyed dugout.

35TH FIRED 40,000 SHELLS IN ONE DAY.

The guns of the 35th Division fired more than forty thousand shells that day, nearly all of them in the three hours between 2:30 and 5:30.

At 5:30 a. m. the infantry went over all along the line. There was no breakfast and little ceremony about it. The sergeant or lieutenant who was leading the platoon, when his watch told him the zero hour was but a few minutes off, would give the order: "Prepare to advance."

The men would crawl out of their fox holes, pick up their raincoats, look to the rifles and wait. At the "H" hour the platoon leader would say: "All right, let's go," and leading the way, he would set his face to the north and move out, his men following.

BEHIND A ROLLING BARRAGE.

In front of the 35th Division, as in most other places, a rolling barrage from the 75s preceded the men one hundred meters which for all practical purposes, is one hundred yards. The men were to advance at the rate of one hundred meters in four minutes. This barrage kept up to 7:40 a. m., when it ceased.

The advance of the 35th was in column of brigades with regiments abreast within the brigades. Within the regiments the formation was column of battalions. The 69th Brigade, commanded by Brigadier General (then colonel) Louis M. Nuttman, was to lead the way. His brigade front was to be as wide as the divisional front. The brigade consisted of the 137th and the 138th Infantry. The 138th was to have the right or eastern half of the divisional area, while the 137th was to cover the left half.

KANSAS CITY INFANTRY IN SUPPORT.

The 70th Brigade was in support of the 69th Brigade, the 140th Infantry Regiment supporting the 138th on the division's right flank, and the 139th supporting the 137th on the division's left flank.

The artillery, which had taken so big a part in pounding the line in the early morning, laid a rolling barrage ahead of the advancing troops, and kept it up until 7:40. By that time the range had increased to a point where it was not practical to throw a barrage because sufficient accuracy could not be assured to make it valuable.

So the artillery was ordered forward with all speed to place itself in a position to help out the infantry. At 8:30 a. m. the 129th Field Artillery Regiment was ordered forward toward Cheppy. At 8:50 one battalion of the 130th Field Artillery was ordered to Varennes, and at 10:15 the other two battalions were ordered to follow. At 9 o'clock the whole regiment of the 128th moved out to take position to the east of Varennes.

The main road from Neuvilly was not available, because the bridge near Baureilles had been blown up by the Germans and an immense mine crater blocked the way in another place. About the only way for our artillery to go forward was along the road which the map gave as our "axis of liaison," as the division's main artery of supply is called. This was a poor road and the artillery horses were very tired. Indeed, the hard work of the days preceding had almost worn them out.

ARTILLERY HELD BACK BY ROADS.

The ground over which the guns had to move had been virtually a No Man's Land for years and was soggy and full of rank weeds. At every little creek or ditch, the wheels sank in the mud and stuck. Officers' mounts and all the horses of mounted details were put into harness to move the guns, but there was not much progress made. Only one battery, which was of the 129th Regiment, got into position again that day. It took position in the north edge of the Rossignol Wood. So that virtually after 8 a. m. that day the infantry had no artillery support. The German fire never slackened.

OVER THE TOP AT 5:30.

When the hour for the infantry advance arrived at 5:30 o'clock, the advance elements went over the top at the tick of the watch.

Once fairly in the field, it became apparent that the going was to be very bad. The autumn frequently brings into that part of France a thick, clinging fog which only a bright sun or a strong wind can disperse. The heaviest fog of the season had descended on the valley of the Aire that morning. At first thought it appeared that this might be of assistance to the 35th, for it would conceal the advancing troops from the waiting machine gunners, but very soon it became apparent that the maintaining of liaison would be most difficult.

For the purpose of keeping the headquarters in the rear informed of conditions at the front, the usual methods had been provided before the attack, but they all broke down from one cause or another. The fog was too much for them.

Signal flags were, of course, useless where one could not see a hundred yards, as were also flash lamps and heliographs, or any other method which relied upon visibility for its success. Wires were carried forward, but, according to regimental signal officers, divisional headquarters failed to connect up with them, so that regimental headquarters were left up in the air telephonically, with nobody on the other end of the wire.

PIGEONS REFUSED TO FLY.

Carrier pigeons refused to fly true, either bewildered by the dense fog and smoke, or benumbed by the din of artillery and smaller gun fire.

Runners were the only means left and they had almost no landmarks to guide them through the fog and smoke.

We will first watch the 138th Infantry. Orders were not to attack Vauquois Hill frontally, but to proceed around it, one party to the right and one to the left, and to attack it from its flanks, which would be the eastern and western ends of the hill.

The 138th went to the right of the hill, which is less than 1,000 feet long and 100 feet high. Not knowing, of course, that a fog of such density was to descend upon the land, orders had been given to the artillery to throw smoke shells at the foot of the hill to conceal our troops, which made the gloom worse.

It was found that no landmarks were visible, and that it was necessary to travel altogether by compass.

To the right was the little wood, all except the near edge invisible in the fog, but it seemed a seething mass of enemy machine guns. On the left was the unknown little valley of the creek, and the rattle of machine guns there told how it was protected, but nothing could be seen. Dead ahead was Cheppy, also invisible, but presumed to be the stronghold.

By the time they had worked themselves into the German line the sun had eaten up the fog. The whole field was filled with the din of crashing artillery and shells, near and far. On all sides, in the short view allowed them by the lay of the country, were clumps of bushes or trees, which doubtless held enemy machine gun nests or riflemen waiting for their prey.

ORDERED TANKS AWAY.

Two small French tanks came bowling over the hill. The tanks tried hard, but they could not cross the creek, and their light fire was not enough to clear the hill of the enemy. Artillery, doubtless promptly advised that the tanks were there, began dropping shells around. Colonel Howland, fearing that the artillery fire drawn by the tanks would do more damage to his forces than the work of the tanks would benefit them, ordered the tanks to the rear.

The French lieutenant in charge of the tanks told Colonel Howland there were eight big tanks some distance to the southwest. Howland ordered him to hurry off and bring them at once.

Finally, after what seemed an age of waiting, eight tanks appeared on the left. Maneuvered perfectly, they swung out of column and into line, crossed the open between the two roads and took position about ten paces apart. All effectives of the 138th formed in squads behind the tanks. While the infantry with rifle and machine guns fired on suspected places in the brush and woods on the hillside, the tanks, with all their armament, pounded the nests and pill boxes to pieces. The 1-pounders fired high explosives into the defenses and the machine guns cut down the evicted gunners. It was a work of minutes for these eight-wheeled forts and the front was clear of an enemy which had delayed the advance for hours.

BIG TANKS DID THE WORK.

The tanks then turned to the right flank, and when they had pounded it awhile Captain Reinholdt took his command forward in combat groups, and mopped up the whole flank. Thus the road into Cheppy was cleared.

There the regiment lay during the night, the officers trying to assist their men to find lost or strayed soldiers and platoons and to count the cost.

There is no way to calculate the losses of the 138th in the first day's fighting, but they had been heavy enough to stun. The doctors worked all night in Cheppy and in the advanced dressing posts, for the enemy fire was constant and there was a steady grist of wounded and dead. How many effectives had been removed from the ranks by death and wounds one can but estimate, for there was no chance for a muster on the field, and some of the scattered squads did not find their companions until the fight was over.

STARTED SHORT OF OFFICERS.

The most serious loss, from the cold military viewpoint, was in officers. There were plenty of men left to do the work, but the division had started in woefully short of lieutenants, captains and majors, and every loss of that kind hurt.

THE 140TH "MOPPED UP."

Behind the 138th Regiment on the right was the 140th, commanded by Lieut. Col. C. E. Delaplane, who had been divisional ordnance officer. The regiment had trouble with the fog and smoke, as every other regiment did, but after passing through the wire in the path taken by the 138th it straightened itself out pretty well and set about its work.

Part of this was mopping up the eastern slope of Vauquois Hill, where there was a little space of stiff fighting. Advancing, they caught some fire from the edge of the Bois de Cheppy, three kilometers to the south of the town of Cheppy. They moved on, bombing dugouts, beating clumps of woods and otherwise making the neighborhood safe for democracy as they went, and dug in for the night behind the 138th on the high ground south of Very.

We now take up the 137th Regiment, which attacked to the west of Vauquois Hill, and their left was along the River Aire, a stream which usually could be forded or waded. It was fairly clear water, but the men were forbidden to drink it, an injunction frequently disobeyed in the next few days.

The dense fog, abetted by the smoke screen thrown by the artillery around Vauquois Hill, caused confusion and intermingling of units from the first, but they pushed through to the ruins which once had been the town of Bouruielles. To this point the regiment's left boundary was the national highway which runs from Neuvilly to Varennes and on northward. This had been a fine road, but across it was the first defense of the Hindenburg line. It was a powerful barricade of concrete interlaced with heavy steel railroad rails, and over the whole the inevitable tangle of barbed wire. Over this the men went, cutting the wire where the artillery had failed to do so and into Bourouielles, where two well-built concrete machine gun emplacements were captured.

The leading battalion pressed forward, cleaned out the Aden strong point, and in the hopeless fog, and with artillery fire which they had met from the first, were stopped before the well constructed defenses of Varennes. Many machine guns opened, there was no chance to look ahead into the gloom. There had been much mixing of units, and it was a well shuffled outfit which took cover before the Varennes defenses and searched the fog with rifle fire while waiting for the day to clear and the rest of the regiment to come up.

139TH SUPPORTED 137TH.

Behind the 137th was its supporting regiment, the 139th of the 70th Brigade. Lieut. Col. Carl L. Ristine commanded this outfit. He had kept his command fairly clear of intermixture in the advance from the jumping off place to Varennes. It was in column of battalions, with companies and platoons in "staggered" formation. That is, they nowhere made straight lines through which machine guns or artillery might plow a path with great loss.

At about 9:45 the support battalion of the 137th Regiment came up behind the 139th. The other two battalions were in front of the 139th. This seemed strange to Ristine, who was sure that he had swept the country between the jumping off place and his present location, and he had not passed a stray battalion anywhere. Still the 137th had started before him and here was one of its battalions behind him. He doubtless had passed them in the maze of wire and the darkness of the fog and smoke.

Ristine sent by runner to the brigade commander, Col. Kirby Walker, a message telling of conditions. After a while he sent another message asking permission of the brigade commander to take his regiment through the 137th and continue the action. He received no reply to any of his messages to brigade headquarters that day.

Ristine decided that the case needed action on his part, so he ordered his men out of their foxholes, put them in formation, went right through the lines of the 137th and proceeded northward.

They had proceeded no great distance, probably less than a kilometer, when the scouts and skirmish line began to slow up, and Ristine, always with the thought of keeping his regiment at the highest pitch, feared the morale might suffer from another stop. So, after instructing Maj. William D. Stepp to take charge of the regiment, he went forward and took command of his own skirmish line.

Ristine then plunged forward with his strong skirmish line, destroying everything which opposed him to a point about a kilometer and a half south of Charpentry. A heavy enfilading fire of artillery and machine guns on his left caught him here and he ordered his men to dig in and wait for the regiment to come up. It did not come, so Ristine started back to find out the reason. He discovered that it had had heavy fighting and a serious bombardment just after he had left it; that Major Stepp had been killed and that the regiment was where he had left it.

He reformed again and, still in column of battalions, moved forward and dug in just back of his skirmish line at nightfall.

On the night of September 26 the division lay in a fairly cohesive line, from a point a little south of Very to a point a little south of La Forge, on the Aire River. Sentries were posted, and patrols working to the front found the enemy at various distances away, nowhere very near.

The men of the 35th were tired, and the most of them slept, although the enemy artillery fire never ceased.

Out on the battlefield the tangled units lay in seeming order, organized for defense or quick attack. Besides the prowling patrols there was little movement among the infantry except where an officer would succeed in finding a lost platoon or squad and would take it back to its parent company.

THE GIGANTIC TANGLE IN TRAFFIC.

But back of the lines, still in the darkness, for one dared not show a light, on every road for twenty miles there was the tangle of vehicles trying to get up with supplies, and the counter current of ambulances trying to get back with the wounded. The roads were bad in the territory captured that day, and our system of traffic control was not good. Immense numbers of negro troops, turned into labor battalions, worked constantly to repair the roads. In the tangle of traffic they plugged away. Bound northward toward the battle line were heavy guns and light guns, horse or motor drawn, and in some instances 75s were mounted on trucks that they might be carried with greater dispatch. There were automobiles of all kinds, and innumerable motor trucks carrying everything used in war, there were wagons, rolling kitchens, water carts, limbers, ambulances, ammunition wagons, machine gun carts, staff cars and, mixed between horses' feet and truck wheels, were the motor cycle orderlies shooting through every crack in the traffic jam.

There was an endeavor to keep horses off the motor roads, and motors off the roads for horse-drawn equipment, but it was not effective until later.

WOUNDED WAITED ON THE GUNS.

It is a cruel necessity of war which requires, under conditions such as existed that first night, that ambulances taking wounded to the rear must be held up to let the guns and ammunition go forward. Hour after hour the long trains of ambulances lay in the congested roads, some of the wounded singing in defiance, some moaning in pain, some would become silent for a while and some became silent forever. One of the few advantages of a regular battle is that there is no restriction on noise. You may talk, sing or shout, curse or pray and nobody cares. Occasionally a man of the Salvation Army, the Y. M. C. A., the K. of C., or some other service, would work his way through, giving cigarettes to the wounded, but usually it was the ambulance drivers who supplied their passengers with smokes.

FIRST DAY BRILLIANT FOR 35TH.

The first day for the 35th had been brilliantly successful, the artillery had done its work magnificently well, our machine gunners were effective even beyond their own expectations, while the backbone of the division, the infantry, had proved itself the equal in skill, address and bravery of the enemy, and they had shown a big superiority in the dash and boldness which gives spring and vivacity to an attacking army.

The first prisoners taken were from the 2nd Landwehr Division and from the 15th Landsturm. But then came captives from the 1st and 5th Divisions of the Prussian Guard. From prisoners it was learned that the 53rd line Division, one of the best, was in reserve, and the grim work in the offing was clearly seen.

ATTACK LED BY 140TH.

The first day of the Argonne battle had gone well on the whole field. Each of the nine divisions had advanced on its territory and the forward movement along the 16-mile front, attended by varying fortunes in the various areas and at a stiff cost everywhere, showed that our troops could go through the defenses of the Hindenburg line.

ARGONNE FOREST TWO MILES TO LEFT.

On the left of the 35th Division, between a mile and two miles away, was the Argonne Forest. The original battle plan was to have the artillery constantly pile gas into the forest so as to tie up enemy activity there and for the troops outside the forest to advance on either side of it, uniting at Grand Pre, at the northern tip of the forest. The 77th Division, in whose sector the most of the forest lay, would then have only the task of mopping up a surrounded territory. These things were all incident to the main object of the advance, which was to get to the enemy's railroads at Mezieres.

Between the 35th and the forest was the 28th Division, formerly Pennsylvania National Guardsmen. On the other side of the forest was the French 4th Army, which also was meeting desperate resistance.

The artillery had worked all day of the 26th and all that night getting forward, for the infantry would, of course, attack again to follow up its success of the first day and it must have artillery support.

ATTACKED WITHOUT ARTILLERY.

Divisional command and staff of the 35th got all reports possible from the artillery before issuing the orders for the second day's fighting and decided that 8:30 a. m. was the earliest moment at which the guns could be relied upon to be in position where they could give a preparation for an attack or a barrage of sufficient strength to be effective. Orders were issued that the infantry was to attack at 8:30 a. m., after a brief artillery preparation, and the troops were to advance behind a rolling barrage.

After this order had been sent out to the brigades on the field, General Traub, about midnight, received imperative orders from the corps commander to attack on the whole divisional front at 5:30 a. m. New orders were hurriedly prepared, countermanding the preceding ones, and dispatched to the infantry.

The divisional headquarters knew just how costly such an advance would be at that hour, with no artillery to beat down the opposition, and they knew the artillery would not be in position in time. General Traub's conception of the duty of divisional commander is to obey the orders he receives from corps or army commanders.

ONE ARTILLERY BATTALION, NEEDED 14.

At 4 a. m. one battalion of the 128th Field Artillery went into position near Cheppy and was the only unit of artillery which was able to assist the infantry, which could have used two brigades (fourteen battalions) on its task. The 129th Field Artillery was in position by 7 a. m. and the 130th Regiment took its place at 4:30 in the afternoon. Throughout the day of September 27 the entire brigade threw less than 1,200 shells, against more than 40,000 fired the preceeding day.

The orders were for the regiments of the 70th Brigade, the 139th and the 140th Infantry, to leapfrog over the regiments of the 69th Brigade, the 137th and the 138th, and to attack. The 69th Brigade was to follow the advance at a distance of 1,000 meters.

[It should be remembered that the 140th Infantry (Kansas City's old Third and the old Sixth) together with the 139th Regiment, formed the 70th Brigade.]

The danger of misunderstanding of orders was alarming to divisional headquarters. One order, directing an attack at 8:30 a. m. had been sent out, and close behind it another ordering an attack three hours earlier. If the second order failed to reach the commanders of the infantry in time, or if it went astray, there was a possibility of a fatal mixup. If the regiments on one side of the divisional front advanced, and the regiment on the other side did not, there would then be one regiment projected into the enemy line with at least one of its flanks entirely unprotected.

THE PROBLEM BEFORE TRAUB.

General Traub knew that he would have no artillery to support the attack at the early hour. Nothing was farther from his desire than to lose troops or to sacrifice men, but he did not feel that he was justified in taking the matter in his own hands and delaying the hour for the attack to 8:30.

In the early morning—about 1:30—he left his headquarters on Mamelon Blanc back of the original line and went forward himself with some of his staff in an endeavor to see brigade and regimental commanders to make sure the orders were understood, and, to quote the words of his report, "thus assuring liaison and co-ordination."

ORDER TO 140TH TO ATTACK.

Colonel Delaplane of the 140th, on the right, received at 5:05 a. m. his order to attack at 5:30. This hardly gave him time to send word to his battalion commander. The orders said a 5-minute artillery barrage would precede the attack. He passed his regiment through the 138th, and was ready approximately on time, but the artillery was silent. In the growing daylight the enemy's fire was becoming stronger and more accurate each minute, both artillery and machine guns playing on the ground over which the regiment was to advance. Delaplane decided it was uesless to sacrifice men waiting for our own artillery to open, so he ordered the advance without it.

How vital the artillery is to the infantry was made clear as soon as the 140th began to move over the high open ground which lay between them and the enemy. Unhampered by fire from our guns, German machine guns apparently in great numbers laid a withering fire across the flat top of Hill 218. Charpentry and the road leading to the northeast out of the town seemed alive with enemy gunners and guns.

140TH HEROES PAY FEARFUL PRICE.

The heavy artillery fire and the more accurate fire from anti-tank guns made it impossible for the tanks to advance. The 140th was paying a fearful price for the little ground it was gaining and the advance slowed up and stopped. Orders were to dig in and hold the ground gained.

The 138th was hardly moved by the morning attack, as they were to follow at a distance of 1,000 meters, and the advance of the 140th did not seem to exceed that. A steady fire from artillery fell on the position they held, and with it a constant attrition of dead and wounded. The dressing station was up with the troops and an endeavor was made to evacuate all casualties immediately, but it was not entirely successful.

RISTINE THOUGHT PRICE TOO HEAVY.

On the other half of the field, Ristine's orders to advance seem to have been changed to 6:30 a. m., probably as a sort of compromise between the first order for 8:30 and the second order for 5:30. I do not know how he managed to get the extra hour, but he did, and postponed the attack to 6:30 in order to have artillery support.

Up to 6:30 the artillery was silent. Ristine notified brigade headquarters of this, and also that he was ready to attack as soon as the artillery opened.

He received no reply from the brigade and there was no sound of any important artillery fire except from the enemy, and the hour had passed, so he attacked without it, as Delaplane had done an hour before. His formation caught the full fire of the enemy artillery and machine guns.

Ristine was able to advance, but as he saw the swaths the opposing fire was making in his ranks, he decided the price was too heavy. He halted his regiment, ordered them to dig in, and sent a message to brigade headquarters that he could not advance further without artillery support.

The passage of lines necessary to permit the 70th Brigade to attack was not required on the left, for Colonel Ristine had made it the day before. The formation of the attack was with two battalions of the attacking regiment in the front line and one in support. The regiments of the 69th were to form in column of battalions.

TANKS HELPED IN ATTACK.

A machine gun company was attached to each front line battalion, and the 128th Machine Gun Battalion was attached to the 69th Brigade. Tanks were assigned to the attacking brigade of infantry, to be used as the brigade commander, Col. Kirby Walker, thought fit.

THE PRICE TOO GREAT.

The situation at 10 o'clock on the morning of September 27 was about like this:

The troops started out under General Traub's orders. The price paid for the ground gained was too great. It was an unprofitable commerce. By command of their regimental commanders they stopped and dug in.

Approximately a thousand meters behind the regiments of the 70th Brigade (the 139th and the 140th) were the 137th and the 138th of the 69th Brigade. They were in support, but there was such a profusion of German fire that each of them was constantly taking casualties.

Although badly tangled by the fighting through the fog on the first day, the infantry had attacked on the morning of the second day while still in the spirit of victory. The morning was cold and cheerless, threatening with rain, but the spirit of the division was not of the volatile kind which would change because of the weather. The men were uplifted and upheld by a conviction that they could whip the Germans, given an even break in big gun fire, aerial obser vation and the other side lines of battle.

ARTILLERY ADVANTAGE WITH ENEMY.

They advanced the second day along the whole divisional front, without artillery preparation or a barrage, or, at best, with a very thin one. The enemy was strengthened at every point and he had brought fresh troops, especially machine gunners, to stop the American advance. It was not a common line of German troops, battered by a thorough artillery pounding, against which the 35th moved the second day. It was a rebuilt line of thoroughly tried troops, nearly all machine gunners, equaling the best men in the German Army. The artillery advantage was with the enemy.

It is a distressing thing for troops to lie under fire, and wait for aid. It was impossible to reorganize under conditions such as existed on the morning of the 27th, and while little additional intermingling of units resulted, the mixing done the day and night preceding was not remedied.

Ristine heard of tanks in his rear, sent for them and at noon tried to move forward again. He placed the tanks on his right and formed his right wing behind them. That part of the line moved faster than his left, but the artillery and anti-tank fire was too heavy, so the tanks turned and retired from the field. This left Ristine's right well ahead of his left, but the troops dug in again and held the crooked line.

STILL NO WORD FROM ARTILLERY.

Our guns were beginning to open occasionally, and noting this, Ristine sent word to brigade headquarters that if it would give him thirty minutes' destructive fire in Charpentry and Baulny, and a barrage in front of that part of his line which was east of the road, he could move forward. It was out of Baulny and Charpentry that the heaviest opposing fire was coming. Ristine feared to move his left forward because of the artillery fire which came from across the river in the sector of the 28th Division. It was apparent that the 28th had not advanced as far as the 35th, and this left the 35th's left flank exposed to the enemy.

Receiving no word as to artillery support, Ristine pulled his right back to the line of his left, ordered the men to dig in and called a meeting of battalion and company commanders to see how he stood. Then, at 5 p. m. he received orders to attack at 5:30.

The attack for 5:30 was ordered by divisional headquarters when it became apparent that the morning attack had failed of its purpose. The corps and the army demanded an advance. The division had tried, but was stopped and held in its tracks. The other eight divisions were attacking with varying results, but for the success of the operation, all must go ahead. Officers and men of the 35th believed it was one of the best divisions in France. At 5:30 the division stood upon its feet amidst the dead and prepared to advance, to show whether it was as good a fighting outfit as it believed it was.

NINE TANKS TO LEAD ATTACK.

Just before the hour of the attack nine tanks, probably the same ones which had fought so well before Cheppy, came chugging over the road from Very, through the position of the 138th and out onto the front of the 140th. The infantry attacked with them. That was on the right of our line. On our left, Ristine gave orders quickly to his officers in conference, and sent them hurriedly back to their commands. There was less than half an hour for preparation.

Guiding well to the left and attacking Charpentry and Baulny almost from the south, the 139th came out of its foxholes like war dogs off the leash. They took a singeing fire full in the face, charged over the machine guns and stamped them out like nests of rats, and had taken both Charpentry and Baulny before stopping to count the cost. The line they could not breach in the morning was no weaker. It did not crumble. But it was as if our men had gathered strength as they lay waiting through the day, and in the afternoon the Germans could not stop them.

RISTINE WENT FAST.

Ristine thought he could prevent his regiment from mixing more than it was already if he was well to the front, according to his statement, so he accompanied the advancing line. Rieger and the other battalion commanders were to handle the rest of the regiment as it was disposed for battle.

They went forward fast, once the stiff crust of the German position was cracked. The 2nd Battalion, Rieger's, pulled up near to Montrebeau Wood. Ristine went even faster, too fast altogether, as will be shown as soon as the work of the other regiments is related.

The 137th had started to advance in the morning behind the 139th, had halted when the leading regiment halted, and had lain all day on the west field, under shell and indirect machine gun fire.

At 5:30 p. m. Major O'Connor of the 137th received orders to attack at 5:30, and at the same time he was advised that Colonel Hamilton was "out," whether by wound, sickness or orders not being explained, and that Major O'Connor was in command of the regiment. O'Connor set his troops in motion and hurried to regimental headquarters to get the staff and learn just what the situation was. Near there he met the brigade commander, who ordered him to advance with the troops.

He hurried ahead and caught up with his outfit just as the 1st Battalion was advancing against Baulny O'Connor got together a scratch detachment, including part of L Company of the 139th, and went through Baulny, probably as early as Ristine's men did. There was some fighting in Baulny, twenty prisoners were taken and O'Connor pushed ahead.

With his outfit he pressed on in the darkness for probably four kilometers which would have carried him into the outskirts of Fleville, meeting no opposition anywhere. The Germans seemed to him to be withdrawing.

INDICATIONS OF GERMAN RETREAT.

His scouts found no other elements of the 35th on either side, so he decided that he must be well ahead of the others, and that it would be wise to get back in liaison. On both sides of his detachment he heard working parties, and the rumble of wheels, indicating that the Germans were retreating.

On the way back he found part of the 139th Machine Gun Company, and he also ran across Colonel Shannon of the general staff, who had come up to observe the action. Shannon returned to the line with Major O'Connor.

They heard a voice in the woods yelling, in German, "Oh, Gus." O'Connor had one of his men who spoke German to shout a reply. In this way they drew the German up to them and captured him. He said he had left the retreating troops to try and find his "bunkie" who had become lost from the main body.

O'Connor's detachment returned to the established line north of Baulny. He found it was composed of most of the 1st Battalion of the 137th, and the machine gun company of the 137th and three companies of the 139th and the 139th machine gun company. Into these were mixed, and badly mixed troops of several other companies. The whole bunch was in a little hollow, too much crowded. Major O'Connor thought, and badly organized for resistance. He tried to improve the disposition for resistance, but did not essay to redistribute the units, which would have been a hopeless task in the darkness. It was after midnight, so there they dug in, and lay for the rest of the night.

140TH WAS SURGING AHEAD.

The late afternoon attack on the right was meeting almost as much success. Behind the tanks, Delaplane's 140th went surging ahead, cleaned the machine gun nests which had held them up, took a battery of artillery, and rested on the edge of the hill to the north, when renewed violence of artillery met them. The first battalion of the 140th went well beyond Charpentry, and was out of touch with the regiment until the following day.

The 138th advanced behind the 140th. It had been under fire all day, held in its place, suffering casualties, and unable to return a blow. The machine guns felt out the enemy positions, but there was nothing of the winning action of the day before.

When the advance came at 5:30, the 138th moved up behind the 140th, and its position when it dug in was not far from that occupied by the 140th during the day. The fire which daylight observation permitted the enemy artillery to put on this section continued through the night.

While our troops were digging in along a fair sort of a line, Ristine and his little party were digging in under other circumstances.

He had moved with his forward detail entirely too fast for the main body of the regiment to keep up, and near the Chapentry Cemetery he ran into a small body of German troops and was halted for a while. After a fight the enemy dispersed, and he moved ahead again. He met up in the darkness with a lieutenant and five men from the 137th Regiment, and was told that the lines were moving forward in a northwesterly direction. Ristine proceeded forward, bombing dugouts and cutting wire, until in what he judged from the map to be the neighborhood of Camp Drachen.

NOT OUR MEN, BUT GERMANS.

In the gloom, he observed many troops moving, and presuming that they were our own, called to them. He discovered that they were retreating Germans. Very soon other retreating Germans came up behind him, and he hastily retired to a large shell hole, organized it for resistance, and waited for the troops to come up.

In the darkness he only got further into the German lines, and before daylight it was apparent that he was well involved. With the approach of dawn and the dispersal of the darkness which had been his protection, Ristine came across a German officers' quarters, with the equipment all laid out for packing and departure. He took the overcoat and later picked up a German helmet, and in this disguise spent the next day in the German lines. He would doubtless have been executed at once as a spy if he had been captured, but luck was with him. He gathered information on battery positions and ammunition dumps, which he turned in with the map co-ordinated as soon as he got in touch with our artillery again, which was not until the night of the next day, the 28th.

When the men finally dug in for the night, the main mass of the troops were beyond Baulny, and some of the more dashing elements probably were as far advanced as Montrebeau Wood.

There was a fairly distinct line, but the mixing of elements was growing worse. Every regiment, in its space, doubtless had elements of every other regiment. Detachments were strung along back toward Cheppy, and there was a determined but seldom successful effort by all commanders to get up rations from Cheppy.

WATER SCARCE ON SECOND DAY.

In all four regiments on the second day, there was a scarcity of water. The water carts had not come up, and virtually every available source of water on the field was under suspicion, and its use forbidden to the men. It was supposed that the Germans, before retiring, had poisoned the wells and springs. Canteens had been emptied, and the men felt badly the need of water.

The men were physically tired, many of them thirsty, and some hungry, although the iron rations were not yet exhausted. But the spirit was excellent. Despite the mixing of elements and the loss of officers, the morale was high, and it was a fine, determined fighting organization that filled the foxholes which dotted the ground from Baulny eastward.

So ended the second day, September 27, with increasing casualties among the officers, only a small part of which casualties I have mentioned.

A BLOODY THIRD DAY.

The night of September 27 (the second day) was employed to the utmost on both sides of the weary battle line. Back of the Americans, the greatest effort was devoted to getting up ammunition and rations, to evacuating the wounded and in preparing for the next day's work.

The Germans seem to have assembled large reserves, sorted them, and during the night they pushed forward to the positions in front of our lines the pick of their army, the veteran machine gunners. It is probable that additional artillery also was brought to the sector, but it is certain that the morning of the 28th found the machine guns very strongly increased. The whole front seemed to bristle with them.

The Germans saw the desperate situation which would confront them if the Americans were not stopped. The Mezieres line of communications was threatened. If it should be cut, the armies in Northern France and Belgium were lost, for they could not be fed, supplied with ammunition or brought out of the country if any part of that four-track railway line fell into our hands.

DIVISION BADLY MIXED UP.

Dawn of September 28 found the 35th Division lying in front of Baulny and Charpentry, approximately a kilometer back of the road which runs from l'Esperance past Chaudron farm and Serieux farm to Eclisfontaine. It was a badly mixed up division.

The 139th (the old 3rd Kansas and the old 4th Missouri) was mostly around Baulny and Charpentry. Its colonel, Ristine, was missing. He was inside the German lines and in dire peril, but the officers of the regiment did not know this. Each battalion assumed that he was with some other battalion. Rieger did not know of Ristine's absence, or he would have taken command of the regiment, which had suffered severely during the preceding day. The regimental adjutant had been killed, the lieutenant who succeeded him had become a casualty, the liaison officer, the signal officer and the three officers who had charge of the Stokes mortars and the one-pounder, all were casualties. As these were virtually all the officers of the headquarters detachment, there was no one left to establish a regimental P. C. Rieger's 2nd Battalion had suffered heavily. The 3rd Battalion was commanded by a lieutenant and two of the four companies were without any officers. The 1st Battalion was commanded by a captain, and he had but one officer to a company.

During the night, 2nd and 3rd Battalions of the 137th had moved up and mixed with the 139th. There seemed to be no distinct organization in the 139th at that time.

Major O'Connor, after his return from the Fleville incursion, had worked all night organizing the position, but he did not know where his other two battalions were, assuming that he was in command of the 137th. In the early morning, the enemy sent a skirmish line against O'Connor's position, apparently more to feel him out than to force him back. Machine gun and rifle fire swept it back, with a good percentage of loss.

ATTACK ORDERED AT 6:30 A. M.

Another attack was ordered for the morning of September 28. It was to be launched on the two halves of the divisional front at different times, the left or western half, in which were the 137th and the 139th, was to attack first at 6:30 a. m.

Capt. D. H. Wilson, who had taken command of the 3rd Battalion of the 137th when Major Koch was wounded at the Balkans trench on the first day, led his men out in this advance, although he was suffering from a painful wound. The order to advance does not seem to have reached Major O'Connor, but he was advised that the 2nd Battalion would pass through the lines. He received no further information as to whether he was in command of the regiment, or whether Colonel Hamilton had returned to duty. For the 139th, Rieger joined the attack with his force, which was already well ahead.

The attack was made against terrific odds. It was across open fields, with no protection of woods or brush. Montrebeau Wood and the strip of woods to the right of it were seething with machine guns. From Exermont light artillery had direct fire on the advancing troops, and from the hill behind Exermont enemy observers watched the whole field and directed artillery fire.

MOVING UNDER STEADY FLANKING FIRE.

On the left, in the sector of the 28th Division, was the town of Apremont, which the 28th Division should have taken, but had not. Out of it came a deadly flanking fire of artillery and machine guns. Beyond this, artillery in the edge of the Argonne Forest had the 35th in easy range. The Germans had orders to stop this advance, and they disposed their armament to do it, or to make us pay the cost.

Our own artillery was a little livelier than on the 27th, but the enemy had an immense predominance.

The mixed units advanced. It was under the lowering sky of a cold, dark fall day. All the glory was gone out of the war, with the glitter and pageantry of the first day's successes, but they went ahead. They were not the dashing lads who went over the top two days before, but they were veterans of battle, hardened soldiers who no longer had any delusions about a soldier's life.

WEARY, BUT STILL FULL OF FIGHT.

The records begin to show confusion now. This was Saturday, September 28. There had been two days of very hard and wearying fighting, and three nights in which sleep was impossible, unless superinduced by absolute physical exhaustion. The men were tired physically, but they were not exhausted. They still had in them the stuff to deliver many a blow or to carry over another charge or two.

On the right of the sector the 140th was in the lead, and the 138th lay just behind it. At 3:30 o'clock in the morning Delaplane of the 140th received an order, presumably from the brigade commander, to take his regiment forward with all speed to protect the flank of the troops on his left, who were to advance. These were, of course, the 139th and the 137th regiments, which were to attack at 6:30 o'clock, and which lay in advance of the two regiments on the right or eastern side of the sector.

THE 140TH DIGS IN.

Delaplane got his regiment under way at 5:30, an hour before the advance on the left, and had made but little progress up to 8 a. m., when the withering concentration of artillery and machine gun fire stopped him. The regiment dug in.

Behind the 140th, the 138th was formed to support the attack, with orders to follow at one thousand meters. The divisional line of advance was swinging to the westward, which caused each advancing unit to guide more and more to the left.

This brought about a greater concentration of troops on the left and a consequent thinning out of the lines on the right. The opposition was heavier on the left half of the sector, both because of the stronger positions held by the Germans in front of us, and because, owing to the 28th Division being unable to keep up, our left flank was constantly exposed to enfilading fire from across the River Aire, and out of the Argonne Wood.

Concerning the 28th Division, it would seem that this excellent fighting organization was not held up so much by opposition on its front, but, it, in turn, suffered by the division on its left. That was the 77th, which was tangled in the Argonne Forest, where Major Whittlesly was to achieve fame with his lost battalion, and many other daring things were to be done. But the division was not even in signaling distance of the divisions fighting in the open. It is to me one of the mysteries of the war—why was a division from the paved streets of New York City sent to fight in the thick woods of the Argonne Forest?

TANKS GET INTO ACTION AGAIN.

At 9.45 the tanks came up again. With them was what was left of the gallant fleet which had lain before the Cheppy defenses on the first day of the fight, like naval war craft cannonading the forts before a hostile harbor. The enemy fire which met the tanks, and the 140th Regiment which advanced with the tanks, was far more deadly than it had been before. The advance was very slow. The men were occasionally able to use their rifles against outposts of machine gunners, and our automatic riflemen and machine gunners kept constant fire going, but the officers and men felt that they received little assistance from our artillery.

It was the bloodiest hour the 140th Regiment had seen. The regiment advanced, but paid a heavier price than it ever had before. The tanks were not as effective as they had been.

The enemy had supplied his front line with anti-tank guns, those long, armor piercing squirrel rifles. Light artillery pushed forward fired pointblank at the slow moving tanks, and a hit with a high explosive shell would destroy a tank. Artillery usually fires by the map, with a compass for direction, a scale on the gun to give elevation, and a book of tables to compute the necessary elevation for the given range. Against these tanks, the gunner could disregard his scales and compasses. He would sight through the bore of the gun at the clearly visible tank, slam in a shell and the breech and pull the lanyard.

In spite of all resistance the 140th finally crossed the Chaudron Road, and pushed five hundred yards ahead to the crest of the ridge to the north, where they dug in. On the way up they were bro ght to a stop on the ridge above Charpentry, and driven back into the ravine. They re-formed, advanced over the hill again, faced the fire and went ahead.

The regiment's left was just about due north of the Chaudron farm, and east of the Montrebeau Wood.

CAUGHT UNDER HIGH EXPLOSIVE RAIN.

When the 140th fell baek from the slope of the ridge just north of Charpentry, Lieut. Leahy took his second battalion of the 138th down the ravine in which they were lying, and moved forward to the support, thinking the 140th would be unable to advance against the opposition. When the 140th was reformed and moved on, he followed at the ordered distance in their rear, and though the enemy fire was constantly growing more effective because of increase in volume and accuracy, the battalion advanced and took position in the line with the 140th. This advance was made through a gruelling fire, and the casualties were very heavy, especially from high explosive shells which the sharpshooting artillerymen threw among the lines.

In this position they felt the full tide of war. Artillery played on them both by direct and indirect fire, machine guns from three sides poured lead into the woods and enemy airplanes in formation flew above them and bombarded them with air bombs and machine-gunned them from the sky.

At 6 p. m. a cold rain began to fall.

SHORTAGE OF OFFICERS.

When reports of the shortage of offieers in the front line reaehed divisional headquarters, the forward echelon of which had been moved to Cheppy, all available officers were rounded up and sent forward. Maj. P. C. Kalloch, a young officer of the general staff, had been aeting as divisional intelligence officer. Maj. Bruce MacGruder, who had eome up to help if he could, was put in the intelligence job, and Kalloch was instructed to report to Colonel Hamilton. At 8 p. m. he found Colonel Hamilton in the rain and darkness of Montrebeau Wood. The colonel instrueted Kalloch to act as his lieutenant-colonel, and he set about trying to find whatever parts of the regiment were available, with the idea of learning what strength there might be in the tangle of the wood.

Meantime, the 137th and elements of the 139th had been fighting all day long in Montrebeau Wood with the determined snipers and machine gunners the enemy had planted there. Colonel Hamilton of the 137th was about worn out, physically, and Major O'Connor, who had not been able to get in toueh with his colonel for two days, disposed what he had of the regiment as well as he could and ordered them to dig in for the night.

PROMISE GUNS THIS TIME.

But at 4:50 a. m. (September 29) he was shown an order which gave him another piece of work to do. It was for an attack by the division at 5:30 a. m. on the 29th.

The order assured the infantıy that there would be a satisfactory artillery barrage to precede the advance, the object of which was to take the town of Exermont and the crests of the ridge running to the east and west of it.

Colonel Hamilton instructed Major Kalloeh to prepare the first wave and lead it in the attaek. Colonel Hamilton was to lead the second one himself.

Montrebeau Wood was black dark, except for the occasional brief flash of a German shell sent into it. The rain was falling heavily, and the business of eollecting and organizing the attacking waves was a hard one. So many of the sleeping men he tried to rouse were dead. By the appointed time, which was forty minutes after the order was reeeived, he had marshaled his line. Their work is a part of the next story.

MAJOR MacDONALD ENTERS THE FIGHT.

Another offieer who went forward that afternoon was a grim old man, as age is reckoned in the army, Maj. Clay C. MacDonald, who had been a national guardsman for twenty-five years. He was divisional mail officer, and it seemed to be the general impression about headquarters that, despite his long experienee, he was a little too old for the front line. At noon that day in Cheppy, a lieutenant had approached Major MacDonald, saluted respectfully and in a brief and soldierly manner told him that his son, Lieutenant MacDonald, had been killed that morning while leading his company in the attack. Major MacDonald did not wince. I noted as I watched him, this self-control. His training did not permit that while under the gaze of so many sympathetic people. His eyes seemed to be looking wistfully to the north, where the guns were pounding on the battle line three miles away. He saluted, turned and entered headquarters, explained the case briefly and demanded of the chief of staff that he be given a command in the front line. He was at once sent forward.

Major MacDonald was working through the rain in Montrebeau Wood at the same time Kalloeh was assembling and organizing seattered elements of the 137th.

PUSHES THROUGH THE WOOD.

Major Rieger, who also had entered Montrebeau Wood on the night of the 27th, had pushed a persistent path through the tangle, fighting carefully, adroitly and effectively, and always going ahead. Before dark he had gained the northern edge of the wood and looked out upon the enemy strongholds ahead. Exermont, the line of the ridge to the east and west, and behind the town, the hill known as 240, which looked over all the territory for four kilometers to the south. There were the enemy observation posts from whieh artillery ranges were correeted, the eannon whieh had worked such havoc among our troops, and the hill itself held much artillery and very many machine guns.

Rieger had organized and held a line in the north edge of the woods, and in the darkness had gone back into the woods to get more men, if possible, and what he needed worse, some officers to help him handle his line. He ran across Major MacDonald, and took him and what men he had collected, and put MacDonald in command of a part of the line.

COLONEL MITCHELL ARRIVES LATE.

Another arrival was Col. Americus Mitchell. He was one of the regular army officers assigned to the division just before the battle, and was now arriving a little late. Bearing orders dated September 24, he reported at division headquarters in the afternoon of September 28, and was instructed to report to the commander of the 70th Brigade.

It had been the intention to put Colonel Mitchell in command of the 139th Regiment, but because of his failure to arrive in time, Colonel Ristine had continued in command. From divisional headquarters he went forward at 6 p. m. to the 70th Brigade, to find his regiment. The division had been rebrigaded, in order to give each brigade one-half of the divisional front constantly, instead of all of it on alternate days, as had been the original plan. Colonel Mitchell learned that his regiment was on the other side of the sector, in Colonel Nuttman's brigade. He went ahead with his search. A stiff regular army colonel plodding along over unknown territory through a black night and a heavy rain, looking for his regiment, which he has never seen and whose location he does not know, is a situation which had many attractive possibilities.

He finally found two companies, and was told that the rest of the regiment was in line on the left near Baulny. Mitchell went to Baulny, reported to Colonel Nuttman, told him he had found parts of A and C companies of his regiment and asked where the rest of the regiment was. Nuttman said the troops were badly mixed. He himself had been out to the front that afternoon, he said, and had found 250 men of the 139th and had posted them as outposts in front of the 137th Regiment.

Mitchell also learned that Ristine, commanding the 139th, had not been seen for twenty-four hours and was supposed to be dead, that the officer casualties in the regiment were very heavy, but no one at brigade headquarters seemed to know anything about the headquarters of the regiment.

WOUNDED AWAITING ATTENTION IN RAIN.

Mitchell fared forth again, and proceeded toward the front. It was very dark and raining hard, and the runners who were guiding him were not always sure of the way. He found two dressing stations, with many wounded men in and about them, waiting in the rain their turns with the doctors or waiting for some way to be taken to the rear. Finally he reached the front line of the 137th and was taken to Colonel Hamilton. The commander of the 137th was sure that there was none of the 139th in front of him, where Colonel Nuttman thought he had posted them.

Considering the rain and darkness, Colonel Mitchell was convinced that there was little chance of finding his command in the night, so he returned to Baulny. The scout officer of the 139th and a few scouts he had found accompanied him.

He was awakened at 3 a. m. by an order from the commander of the 69th Brigade to attack at 5:30 a. m. He went to Colonel Nuttman and explained that he could not obey the order because he could not find his regiment. Colonel Nuttman told him to take what he had and form a reserve for the 137th. Mitchell instructed Capt. W. C. Williamson to form what troops he could get for this purpose.

CHIEF OF STAFF TO THE LINE.

Colonel Hawkins, the efficient and conscientious chief of staff, felt that he could do more good at the front than at headquarters. The lines were so disorganized, and liaison was so poor, that the functions of headquarters seemed to him of much less importance. It was a matter of fighting now. So he asked corps headquarters to send somebody to sit in for him, while he went forward and took the place of an incapacitated field officer. Division headquarters did not know what officers were out and what were in, it so seldom heard from any of them. All reports said that the 137th was badly tangled, and some reports had it that Colonel Hamilton was wounded, or gassed, or exhausted.

Colonel Jens Bugge came from corps headquarters to act as chief of staff and Hawkins went forward. He found that Colonel Hamilton had brought some sort or reorganization out of the remains of his regiment, that he had a line in the forward edge of Montrebeau Wood, and that he was confident he could hold it. Hawkins started back to rejoin the brigade commander, Colonel Nuttman, but got lost in the darkness and failed to find him again that night.

The division had been rebrigaded, as has been told, and Colonel Walker now had command of the right half of the divisional front, with the 138th and the 140th. Colonel Nuttman, with the 137th and the 139th, commanded the left half.

DEPRESSION AT HEADQUARTERS.

The feeling at division headquarters was that the field was not going well. The iron resistance of the reenforced enemy, fighting on ground he knew well, and ground which he must hold at all cost, seemed firm enough to halt the division, as the battle was viewed from headquarters. The morale of a division is nearly always higher in the front lines than back at headquarters. The spirit of fighting pervades the front, the actual conflict is to the blood of the men, and their sergeants and lieutenants are convinced that they can whip the boche, and the feeling finds its way to the men and upholds them.

To headquarters come most depressing reports from men drifting back, the slightly wounded, the slightly gassed and the physically exhausted. Each one who happens to pass through headquarters is eagerly questioned, and the returning man is very prone to believe that his personal experience and emotions are those of his whole company or regiment. He believes that the ills he has suffered, mental and physical, are common to the whole command.

WOUNDED LAY IN COLD RAIN.

The men were hungry and very tired. The cold rain which kept up all night soaked them, of course, as there was no cover, but it was hardest on the wounded. The doctors worked without ceasing, and the stretcher bearers toiled until they dropped in their tracks, but many wounded men laid all night in the rain. I saw that night a stretcher bearer who put wires looped around his wrists and fastened around the stretcher handles, to help his tired hands. Both wrists were bleeding.

The third day's fighting had brought to the 35th Division a profit of about two kilometers (about one and one-third miles) gained. The cost had become heavier for each forward step and only the welfare of the whole field justified the expense. The line ran straight westward from the right limit of the sector to the Montrebeau Wood, went through the front of the wood, and coming out of it, dipped sharply to the south, where it turned to present a front to the enemy across the River Aire in the sector of the 28th Division, which was being held to a much slower rate of advance than the 35th.

The 35th had gained in the day nearly, but not quite, as much ground as it had on the second day. The first day's advance had been more than both the second and third days' advances, but the first day had had magnificent artillery support.

During the day of the 28th, the artillery was still trying to get into position to give more assistance to the infantry, and to counteract, as far as it could, the tremendous effectiveness of the German artillery.

At 8 a. m. General Berry had ordered the 128th Field Artillery to move its 2nd Battalion into position at Very, and the 1st Battalion to Charpentry. The 2nd Battalion was in position soon after 11 in the morning, and the 1st was firing from its new place at 4 p. m.

In all the day of the 28th the artillery brigade fired only thirty-two hundred shells.

RELIEF FOR THE 35TH.

When the division established itself on the line prepared by the engineers, and organized for defense, it had been stopped temporarily by the opposition, and its condition was very similar to that of every other division on the American front.

The first phase of the battle was over. The defense system against which the division had thrown itself was called the Kriemhilde-Stellung line, and the Germans had been able to join up along this line, which is a part, one layer, it might be called, of the Hindenburg line.

In the area of the 35th Division, we knew only of the situation and condition in our own sector and on our own front. Back in corps and army headquarters it was possible to consider the front as a whole, with the condition of each of the nine divisions having its proper weight in the decision of the high command.

FACED NEW, RESTED DIVISIONS.

Reports from the vital fronts, including the 35th's, showed that prisoners recently captured proved that new, rested divisions of Germans were being put in against the Americans.

General Pershing had the option of sending his forces again to the attack, or of holding the ground already gained while he prepared for another general advance. This preparation would include getting up artillery, the replacing of those divisions which had suffered most with his supports, and rehabilitating the others with replacements, hot food, equipment and clothing.

THREE OTHER DIVISIONS RELIEVED.

The general decided that it would be unwise to send his tired divisions against the new German divisions, and adopted the latter course.

When the 35th lay on the engineers' line, three of the original divisions had been taken out of the line. First was the 80th, which had been pulled back far reorganizing and reforming, and then was sent in again. September 30 the 37th, which was the second division on our right, was relieved by the 32nd, and on the same date the 79th, which was the third division on our right, was relieved by the 3rd Division.

While the situation was developing in headquarters of the army staff, the 35th, among others, must hold the line. Our artillery was up and in position. The engineers' line was manned, but nowhere quite as strongly as it might have been, and there was great comfort in the fact that scattered all along were our machine gun battalions and companies, whose courage, wakefulness and strength never seemed to fail.

The "line of resistance" was organized on the line l'Esperance-Chaudron Farm—Hill 231. Outposts were placed and a second line of resistance was established a short distance behind the first, beginning on the ridge north of Baulny. The majority of the troops had sifted back of the line, and lay in fox holes, dugouts, ditches, trenches and hollows over all the territory almost back to Cheppy. They were anywhere that they could sleep and get a little rest. Officers were very few, and noncoms commanding platoons and companies held their outfits together as well as they could and waited for orders.

SECOND LINE OF RESISTANCE FORMED.

The greatest mass of troops, of course, was on the line. Officers there had spent the night of the 29th preparing the position, disposing the troops for resistance and in the very earnest endeavor to get up rations and ammunition.

Neither officers nor men knew whether the next day would see them put again to the attack, or withdrawn, but there were continual rumors, which would spread like wildfire along the trench, that the division was to be relieved.

The second line of resistance was formed soon after midnight on orders from the 69th Brigade. Colonel Mitchell gathered what men he could from the territory about him and took them to the line. Some machine gunners came up also, and he had three or four hundred men behind the engineers, with eight or ten machine guns. The tangle of units was worse than ever. Colonel Hamilton had gone to hospital, a casualty, on the 29th, and Major O'Connor, commanding the remnants of the 137th Regiment, brought it back to the engineers' line. He inserted parties of his men in the line wherever they were needed, thus mixing his own outfit worse than ever, but strengthening the line.

ENGINEER COLONEL IN COMMAND.

The engineers dug the line, and during the day of the 30th, the greater number of men in it were engineers. Elements of infantry were scattered through, without much order, but if order there were, one might say that the 137th was on the left and the 138th on the right. Machine guns were in position and the line was ready. The men who saw to that were Colonel Clarke and his second in command, Major Stayton, both engineers. Colonel Clarke commanded the divisional front and directed its defense to hold the line. It argues a tense and strange situation when a colonel of engineers is put in command of the front line. No mistake was made in putting Clarke and Stayton on this job. They were well up to it.

LAID A PERFECT BARRAGE.

Thompson and his 3rd Battalion of the 138th were still outside the works. He had skillfully taken a position which the enemy would find difficulty in driving them out of and from which he could constantly harass the Germans. He was exactly where the enemy did not want him to be, and from 3 to 6 a. m. his position was heavily and accurately shelled. Thompson's line was unmoved by the cannonading, in spite of casualties. This fire came mostly from Thompson's left flank and his left rear, doubtless out of the Argonne Forest.

After daylight on the morning of the 30th the Germans tried to drive him from his position by a counter attack out of Montrebeau Wood, which the enemy had re-entered immediately after the American withdrawal. At 9 a. m. one German ran out with a tripod for a machine gun and dropped in a shell hole. Then came another man with the gun. Then another with ammunition. Three guns were advanced in this way, and Thompson, knowing an attack was imminent, called on our artillery for a barrage. The Germans came out of the woods in a charging wave, and our artillery came across with a perfect barrage at the same time.

The co-ordinates given were perfect, and the aim of the guns was no less perfect. The infantry with Chauchats and rifles kept up a killing fire on the wave, and it hesitated, stopped and retreated into the woods with heavy loss.

During the day three such attacks were repulsed, and the enemy machine guns which were constantly being pushed forward were fought all day long and many put out of commission.

Nightfall again found Thompson's men in the line before Montrebeau Wood, grimly holding on. Colonel Nuttman, commanding the 69th Brigade, had become ill, and Col. H. S. Hawkins, chief of staff, taken over command of the brigade. Colonel Nuttman was evacuated to a hospital in the rear.

The engineers' line was shelled all day long, and endeavors were made by the enemy to filter machine gunners back, but these were prevented.

Two light counter attacks against the line were easily repulsed, and at nightfall, the position was where it had been the night before, and it was better organized and stronger than it had been the preceding evening.

RELIEF FOR THE 35TH

Reports which had sifted back to the corps and division headquarters represented the division in worse shape than it really was, badly as it was mixed up, and weary as were the men. It probably was in better shape than some other divisions along the front, but the position was so vital and the resistance there so strong that army headquarters decided to relieve the 35th.

As a testimonial to the importance of the position and the strength of the opposition, headquarters sent to take the place of the 35th the division which it believed to be one of the two best, if not, indeed, the very best, in the American Army. This was the 1st Division.

Orders were received that the 1st Division would relieve the 35th on the morning of October 1, before daylight.

Everybody was willing but Thompson. He was still out in front with his battalion, fighting the enemy in the edge of Montrebeau Wood, keeping perfect touch with the 91st on our right and connecting with the engineers' line by his patrols.

At dark of the 30th, he again received orders to withdraw, but he felt that his position was too vital to permit of his abandoning it until a relief had come, so he stuck to the line. He had received some rations and ammunition, and, in the army phrase, was "sitting pretty."

At 3 o'clock on the morning of October 1, the 1st Division came in for the relief, which it accomplished smoothly and with speed. The men came in standing in the shell fire, and they took many casualties. Our men, taught the hard lesson presented as little of their bodies to the enemy fire as possible. As fast as one of our sections was released it was march to the rear.

The company of the 28th Regulars sent to relieve Thompson came in echeloned in depth, but with fifty men in the front line, to take the place of the probably two hundred Thompson had left. Thompson sent his men back under other officers and sergeants, and stayed six hours longer with the relief, showing them the lay of the land. When he rejoined his outfit near Cheppy, Captain Bottger had again taken command of the battalion.

Elements of the division were grouped just south of Charpentry before dawn and from there marched south to Cheppy and into the area between Cheppy and the Forge Moulin, to be sorted, grouped and re-assembled.

HOW DIVISION LOOKED AFTER RELIEF.

The division, like every other division at this stage of a great battle, looked more like a band of refugees than a military organization. The men were unshaven, dirty and haggard. Their clothing was soiled and torn, their shoes muddy and worn out. Many had minor wounds and the white bandages were plentiful. A great deal of equipment had been lost or thrown away. They lay about their various grouping spaces, two or three together sleeping under one or two raincoats. Some had grown hoarse from cold or gas, and nearly everyone's eyes were red from gas and loss of sleep.

A serious dysenteric condition had broken out throughout the entire outfit. Its cause was variously ascribed to the water, to eating canned food continuously, to the lack of hot food for five days. The epidemic greatly weakened the men and made the reassembling of units still more difficult.

It was a sorry band, but they had played a great part in a great battle. The guns were pounding heavily just ahead. Airplanes, our own and the enemy's, flew above, and the air was full of fighting; shells snarled above them, but they slept.

For this weary, dirty, lousy band of men had in the last five days fought with and taken prisoners from six German divisions, the 1st and 5th Prussian Guard, the 1st and 2nd Landwehr, and the 37th and 52nd divisions of the line.

They had advanced thirteen kilometers (eight and two-thirds miles) into enemy territory and through the defenses of the Hindenburg line. They had organized and held a line ten kilometers forward of the original front.

RESULTS OF DIVISION'S WORK.

They had captured and turned in through their own cage as prisoners 751 men and thirteen officers. Besides these, some two hundred and fifty prisoners had been cleared through the 91st Division's cage.

Included in the great mass of material captured were the following:

Eighty-five machine guns.
One hundred and sixty auto rifles.
One hundred anti-tank guns.
Four telephone systems.
One engineer dump.
Two ammunition dumps.

MORE THAN A THOUSAND DEAD.

For itself, the division's casualties of all kinds had been 232 officers and 6,688 men. These included killed in action, wounded, gassed and taken prisoner. Among these, although the reports did not show it, would be more than a thousand dead.

The heavy toll of casualties among officers was probably the greatest factor in causing the mixing up of elements, which caused the greatest confusion. The men were no braver than their officers and so we lost the men who were trained to lead. We had not been in war long enough to learn from the French that officers must be conserved.

The brilliant action on the River Aire, the 35th on the right and the 28th on the left, brought from the American command the signal honor of mention in the cummunique. We had been at war for more than a year, but the communique had not yet identified the units when telling of their work. The communique issued after the first day's fight said:

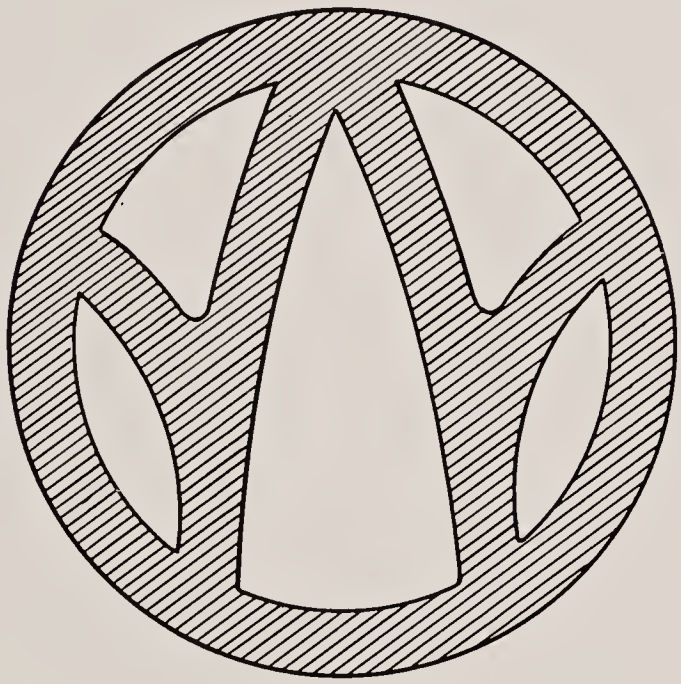

"Pennsylvania and Missouri and Kansas troops, serving in Major General Liggett's corps, stormed Varennes, Montblainville, Vauquois and Cheppy after stubborn resistance."

The captures of other towns along the line were mentioned, but no other troops specified. The Pennsylvanians were in the 28th Division and the Missouri and Kansas troops made up the 35th.

The distinguished generals who saw the troops in the British area in May all predicted they would make magnificent soldiers and said they would watch with great interest to see whether the predictions were verified.

They came true. At no time in the fight were the enlisted men called upon by their officers for any action that they did not immediately try to perform. They advanced just as gallantly to the last attack as they did in the first, and they underwent the exhausting trial, privations and continuous work with rare stamina. If the fame of the division rests upon the work of the enlisted men it will live forever.

THE EIGHTY-NINTH DIVISION

SLEEVE INSIGNIA OF
89TH AMERICAN DIVISION

BRIEF HISTORY OF

THE EIGHTY-NINTH DIVISION

Log of the 89th Division

Headquarters
89th American Division
Second Section, G. S.
Germany

January 31, 1919.

This division was:

THE FIRST

Division to move from training area to the front by truck.

Division to enter the line without previously being brigaded with French or British troops.

Division to be continuously in the front line for more than eight weeks.

National Army Division to participate in a major operation.

National Army Division to enter Germany.

The 89th Division, United States Army, called the "Middle West Division," with Major General Leonard Wood as Commanding General, was organized on August 25, 1917, at Camp Funston, Kansas. The majority of the officers were from the Fourteenth Provisional Training Regiment, Fort Riley, Kansas. These officers, as well as the majority of the enlisted men, were selected from the states of Missouri, Kansas, South Dakota, Nebraska, Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona.

The first enlisted men arrived on September 6, 1917. From this date up to May 8, 1918, new men were transferred into and out of the Division. These transfers, especially the last one, which was from Camp Grant, Illinois brought in a number of men from other states, but the incoming local drafts always kept the majority of the Division Personnel from the states originally mentioned.

General Wood, on November 26, 1917, left for an inspection tour overseas; due to the severe wound he received in France, he did not return until April 12, 1918, and was in command of the Division until June 1, 1918, when the Division left Camp Mills, L. I., for France.

During General Wood's absence overseas and again after the Division left for France until September 3, 1918, the Division was commanded by Brigadier General Frank L. Winn, who was also Commanding General of the 177th Infantry Brigade of the same Division.

From September 3 to November 15, 1918, the Division was commanded by Major General William M. Wright. When he left to command the First Army Corps, the command of the Division was again given to Major General Frank L. Winn, who led it into Germany.

The Division, less 164th Field Artillery Brigade, started leaving Camp Funston on May 22, 1918, arriving at Camp Mills, Long Island, on May 25. On June 2 organizations of the Division started leaving for New York and Montreal, which were the points of embarkation.

The convoys which carried the Division overseas assembled at New York and Halifax and sailed for England. On arrival there the route taken was from Liverpool and London to Winchester, to Southhampton, to le Havre, France, to the RIMACOURT-ST. BLIN-PREZ sous la FOUCHE-TRAMPOT training area, arriving here June 30, 1918.

On August 5, 1918, the Division as a member of the First American Army, Fourth Corps, embussed and relieved the 82nd American Division in the REMENAUVILLE-SEICHEPREY - BOUCONVILLE sector north of TOUL. While in this sector active daily patrolling was maintained, many prisoners and identifications from the Boche being obtained, but no prisoners from this Division were lost to the enemy. Casualties were slight.

This sector was held by the Division until September 12, when it went over the top as a front line Division in the ST. MIHIEL operation with a sector extending from LIMEY exclusive west to 2 kilometers west of and including FLIREY.

During this operation the average advance of the Division was 12 kilometers, extreme depth 21 kilometers, and the towns of BENEY, ESSEY, BOUILLONVILLE, PANNES, XAMMES, and THIACOURT were taken.

Prisoners, material, etc., captured and casualties were as follows:

Prisoners: Officers, 80.
Men, 2,207.
Cannon, 72.
Minenwerfers, 10.
Machine guns, 95.
Rifles, 1,000.

And enormous quantities of artillery and small arms ammunition, grenades, clothing and blankets, engineer stores and other equipment. Also several locomotives and a number of railroad cars were taken. Prisoners taken and easualties imposed upon the 10th German Division and the 77th German Reserve Division which opposed the Division rendered these Divisions incapable of further immediate service.

The casualties were:

Officers:	Killed,	16.
	Wounded,	69.
Men:	Killed,	281.
	Wounded,	2,040.
	Missing,	29.

While in the ST. MIHIEL sector the 89th American Division was "Mentioned in Orders" and "Commended" as follows:

G. O. No. 141, 32nd French Army Corps, 1918:

"The General commanding the 32nd Army Corps highly congratulates the patrol of the 356th I. R. U. S. which, on August 14th, having encountered an enemy detachment, succeeded in capturing 4 prisoners.

"For a long time, in that difficult sector where both adversaries have been using best artifice, we had not taken any prisoners to identify the troops in front of us.

"This action shows the care taken by the 89th D., I. U. S. in the preparation of night raids.

"It also shows the Go and Dash of the soldiers of this fine Division.

"The General Commanding the 32nd French A. C.

Signed: PASSAGA."

G. O. No. 142, 32nd French Army Corps, 1918:

"The command of the sector of Lucey will be taken over today (August 20), at 3:00 p. m. by General Dickman, Commanding the 4th Army Corps, United States Army, the Headquarters of which will be at Toul.

"Upon relinquishing command of this sector, the General commanding the 32nd Corps of the French Army wished to congratulate the 89th Division, U. S. A., upon its discipline, its spirit and its determination, all of which surely guarantee laurels soon to be gained by this fine Division, under the distinguished command of its chief, General Winn.

"The General Commanding the 32nd French A. C.

Signed: PASSAGA."

G. O. No. 6, Hdq. 4th American Army Corps. 1918:

"The Fourth Corps has defeated the enemy and driven him back on the whole corps front. All objectives were reached before the time prescribed in orders, a large number of prisoners and a considerable amount of booty captured. The rapid advance of the corps, in conjunction with the action of the other elements of the First Army, rendered the ST. MIHIEL salient untenable to the enemy, who has retreated.

"The greatest obstacle to the advance was thought to be the enemy wire which presented a problem that caused anxiety to all concerned. The Corps Commander desires to express in particular his admiration of the skill shown by the small groups in the advance battalions and their commanders in crossing the hostile wire and in general to express his appreciation of the hostile spirit and daring shown by the troops, and the rapidity and efficiency with which the operation was conducted.

"By command of Major General Dickman:

Signed: STUART HEINTZELMAN,
Chief of Staff."

G. O. No. 7, Hdq. 4th American Army Corps, 1918:

"The Corps Commander is pleased to transmit to the command the following telegram received by the Commander-in-Chief: 'My Dear General: The First American Army under your command on the first day has won a magnificent victory by a maneuver as skillfully prepared as it was valiently acted. I extend to you as well as to the officers and to the troops under your command my warmest compliments.—Marshal Foch.'

"By eommand of Major General Dickman:

Signed: STUART HEINTZELMAN,
Colonel, General Staff,
Chief of Staff."

G. O. No. 8, Hdq. 4th American Army Corps, 1918:

"The Corps Commander takes great pride in repeating the following telegram received by him from the Commander-in-Chief of the American Expeditionary Forces:

'Please accept my sincere congratulations on the successful and important part taken by the officers and men of the 4th Corps in the first offensive of the First American Army on September 12th and 13th. The courageous dash and vigor of our troops has thrilled our countrymen and evoked the enthusiasm of our Allies. Please convey to your command my heartfelt appreciation of their splendid work. I am proud of you all.—Pershing.'

"By command of Major General Dickman:

Signed: STUART HEINTZELMAN,
Chief of Staff."

G. O. No. 18, Hdq. 1st American Army, 1918:

"The following cablegram has been received by the Commander-in-Chief and is published for the information of all concerned:

'Accept my warmest congratulations on the brilliant achievements of the Army under your command. The boys have done what we expected of them and done it in the way that we most admire. We are deeply proud of them and of their Chief. Please convey to all concerned my grateful and affectionate thanks.

WOODROW WILSON.'

"While we are all proud of the splendid success that has come to the Army even in its initial effort, and while we feel that our countrymen are justly exultant, let us fix our minds firmly on the final victory and strive more earnestly than ever to carry out our great purpose."

G. O. No. 238, G. H. Q., A. E. F., 1918:

"It is with soldierly pride that I record in General Orders a tribute to the taking of the St. Mihiel salient by the First Army.

"On September 12, 1918, you delivered the first concerted offensive operation of the American Expeditionary Forces upon difficult terrain against this redoubtable position, immovably held for four years, which crumpled before our ably executed advance. Within twenty-four hours of the commencement of the attack, the salient had ceased to exist and you were threatening Metz.

"Your divisions, which had never been tried in the exacting conditions of major offensive operations, worthily emulated those of more arduous experience and earned their right to participate in the more difficult task to come. Your staff and auxiliary services, which labored so untiringly and so enthusiastically, deserve equal commendation and we are indebted to the willing co-operation of veteran French Divisions and of auxiliary units which the Allied commands put at our disposal.

"Not only did you straighten a dangerous salient, capture 16,000 prisoners and 443 guns, and liberate 240 square miles of French territory, but you have demonstrated the fitness for battle of a unified American Army.

"We appreciate the loyal training and effort of the First Army. In the name of our country, I offer our hearty and unmeasured thanks to these splendid Americans of the 89th Divisions which were engaged.

"By command of General Pershing:
JAMES W. McANDREW,
Chief of Staff."

After this operation the Division organized the FLIREY sector, took over the PANNES sector from the 42nd American Division and the LIMEY sector from the 78th American Division and held a large sector of the area gained by the above operation.

The 164th Field Artillery left Camp Funston on June 5, and trained in France near BORDEAUX, joining the Division on September 15, and supporting it up to the time it left for the ARGONNE-MEUSE sector. During the ARGONNE-MEUSE drive the Division was supported by the 57th and 58th Field Artillery. The 164th Field Artillery joined the Division in Belgium and accompanied it on its march into Germany.

On October 9, 1918, the Division was relieved in the PANNES-FLIREY-LIMEY sector by the 37th American Division, and moved, embussing and marching to the ARGONNE-MEUSE sector near the BOIS de BANTHEVILLE.

On October 19 the Division, as a member of the First American Army, Fifth Corps, went into the line along the SOMMERANCE-ROMAGNE road where it relieved the 32nd American Division. Between that date and November 1 the BOIS de BATHEVILLE were attacked and cleared of the enemy, the lines pushed up to the north edge of the BOIS and preparations made for a further advance.

On November 1st the Division attacked in the final phase of the ARGONNE-MEUSE offensive and in five days advanced to the west bank of the MEUSE, the line extending from opposite STENAY, thru LANEUVILLE, CESSE, LUZY, LETANNE to opposite POUILLY.

From November 5 to November 10 the river and towns opposite were patrolled and preparations for a further advance to cross the river were made. On the night of November 10 the crossing on foot bridges and rafts took place with the result that on November 11 at 11:00 a. m., when the armistice went into effect, the line extended from east of STENAY and INOR to east of AUTREVILLE on the east side of the MEUSE.

During this operation the average advance of the Division, which included the crossing of the river MEUSE, was 26 kilometers, extreme depth, 31 kilometers, and the towns REMONVILLE, BARRICOURT NOUART, TAILLY, LE CHAMPY HAUT, LE CHAMPY BAS, BEAUCLAIR, BEAUFORT, CESSE, LUZY, LANEUVILLE, POUILLY, AUTREVILLE and STENAY were taken.

Prisoners, material, etc., captured and casualties were as follows:

Prisoners: Officers	114
Men	2,660
Rifles	400
Machine guns	360
3-inch pieces	12
77 mm. guns	24
Guns larger than 77 mm	6
Guns, 155 mm	4
Guns, 150 mm	5
210 mm. Howitzers	2
9-inch Howitzer	1
Anti-aircraft gun	1
Minenwerfers	15
Caissons	30
37 mm. guns	7
Auto trucks	3
Truck, oil burning	1
Wagon train	1
Horses	9

and a large quantity of ammunition of all calibers.

Casualties were: Officers—Killed, 29.
Wounded, 105.
Men— Killed, 771.
Wounded, 2,944.
Missing, 189.

While in the ARGONNE-MEUSE sector the 89th American Division was "Mentioned in Orders" and "Commended" as follows:

G. O. No. 82, Hdq. 89th A. I. D., 1918:

"The Corps Commander commented today most favorably on the discipline of the Division as exemplified by the soldierly bearing and conduct of the officers and men. The Corps Commander had heard of the Division's reputation in this regard before it came overseas, and he had seen it in the LUCEY sector. He was glad today to express his approval.

"It now becomes the duty and pride of all ranks to foster this reputation. No matter what hardships may come our way, we have an enviable name to uphold. We have not trained these many months as soldiers to lose our grip in the presence of the enemy, the hardest troops the Germans can throw against us.

"A Division of American men who hold their heads high, who are thorogoing soldiers all the time, such a division cannot be defeated, cannot be stopped, cannot be denied the prize of victory.

WRIGHT, Commanding."

Letter, Hdq. 1st American Army, 1918:

"The Army Commander directs that you convey to the Commanding General, officers and men of the 89th Division, his appreciation of their persistent and successful efforts in clearing the Bois de Bantheville of the enemy.

Signed: H. A. DRUM,
Chief of Staff."

When the 89th took over a sector of the front northwest of Verdin on October 19 and 20, relieving the 32nd, the relief was made so quietly and so efficiently, Maj. Gen. W. G. Hahn, Commanding the 32nd, was moved to write this letter to the 89th:

"The brigade and regimental commanders of the 32nd Division have reported on the conduct of the troops of the 89th Division in making the relief of that division on October 19-20. Each and every report indicates most excellent discipline in the organizations of the 89th Division. The Brigade and Regimental commanders had previously by reconnaisance and the collection of information informed themselves as to the location of our elements, and when it came to make the relief hardly any guides from the 32nd were necessary. This was most fortunate, as you are aware that our troops were very much worn out by the long fighting they had in this sector. It, therefore, gives me unusual pleasure to express to you the great satisfaction that my division felt, and we are all hoping that the two divisions may serve close together in the future."

Letter, 5th Army Corps, U. S. 1918:

"In transmitting the enclosed letter to you, your officers and men, the Corps Commander desires me to add his commendation to that of the Army Commander, and to congratulate you on the morale and spirit of your Division as shown by its recent work.

Signed: W. B. BURTT,
Chief of Staff."

Letter, 5th Army Corps, U. S., 1918:

"I have this day visited a majority of the Battalions of your Division, and have talked with the soldiers upon the subject of the operations that may devolve upon them. I have been most favorably impressed and highly gratified by the fine physical condition and the soldierly bearing and deportment of officers and men, and the superior morale that appears to exist. In particular I desire to commend the Division for the cleanliness in which the men keep themselves under adverse conditions, and the attention given to shaving and sanitation.

"The results of my visits to your troops inspire me with confidence that they will vigorously and successfully execute the missions intrusted to them, and that they will add further prestige to the Division and honor to themselves and to their country by defeating the enemy wherever found, and by advancing rapidly and resolutely to their objectives regardless of the progress of neighboring units.

Signed: C. P. SUMMERALL,
Major General, Commanding."

Telegram, 1st American Army, 1918:

"Army commander desires to grace and express to you his appreciation for the work done this day. He desires you to convey his appreciation to the 89th Division and Division Commander. Please have this information transmitted to all organizations as far as practicable this night.

"To C. G. 89th Division.

Signed: DRUMM."

Letter, Hdq. 5th U. S. Army Corps, 1918:

"In addition to my telephone message, I desire to convey to you and to the Officers and Soldiers of the 89th Division my profound appreciation and great admiration for the splendid manner in which the Division accomplished the mission allotted to it in the advance of the Fifth Corps on November 1st.

"With a dash, courage, and speed that is worthy of the best traditions of our service, the 89th Division quickly overran the enemy's strong organization, followed its barrage, and planted itself on all objectives in accordance with the schedule previously arranged. It has captured many prisoners, guns, and spoils of war, showing that the enemy was afforded no opportunity to escape.

"The Division has more than justified the high confidence of the Commander in Chief when he selected it to form the advance in the great operations that have begun.

"It is a high honor to command such troops, and I beg that you will convey to your officers and soldiers the assurances of my abiding wishes for their continued success in the campaigns that lie before it.

Signed: C. P. SUMMERALL,
Major General, Commanding."

Extract, 88th Division (German) order, 1918:

"In the last days considerable losses have been caused by enemy artillery fire. These are only to be prevented when the troops dig themselves in well. Moving about in prominent places is without object, as American Artillery places all landmarks under fire.

"I expect that the commanders personally see to it that the troops dig in and build shelters. Wood may be obtained in the Pioneer Park at MONTIGNY.

"In the preceding night an American patrol hailed the 170th J. D. in German. This use of our tongue with the intention of deceiving our outposts has often been observed lately. The command has therefore ordered the use of a pass word: Pass word for tonight 'Danzig,' pass word from November 2nd, noon, 'Feuerschein,' pass word from November 5th, noon, 'Fischotter.'

"The division is again opposite the 89th American Division as in the St. Mihiel region. This division is as at that time still known as a good American shock division which undertakes many strong patrol movements. In the present sector the 89th Division is probably in the line with three regiments in the front line, the fourth regiment in reserve. The Division is at full strength, its combat strength is high, namely 5 officers and 250 non-coms and men per company. From the words of prisoners brought in in the last few days the Division has been placed in the present sector for an advance. From various maps and other notes it attempts to take as its objective the line from BUZANCY heights southwest of STENAY.

"The capture of new prisoners for the further clearing of the situation is urgently commanded."

Telegram, 1st American Army to Commanding General 5th A. C., 1918:

"November 6, 5:00 p. m. The Commander in Chief has informed the Commanding General First Army that he has received following telegram from Marshal Foch: 'The operations which were begun on the first day of November by the First American Army have already assured—thanks to the valor of the high command and to the energy and bravery of the troops—results of the greatest importance. I am happy to send you my warmest congratulations on the success of these operations.' The Commander in Chief adds to the above 'In transmitting the above telegram from the Allied Commander in Chief I desire to express my admiration of the past success of the officers and soldiers of the First American Army and my confidence that they are yet to accomplish still greater deeds.' Notify all concerned.

"By command of Lieutenant General Liggett.
Signed: DRUMM."

Telegram, 1st U. S. Army, 1918:

"The following general order of the 1st Army has been published this date: 'On November first, after constant fighting for over one month, the First American Army launched an attack against the German Army which had established itself for determined resistance. In five days it had penetrated 25 kilometers and had driven the enemy in retreat before it. Its brilliant success, in connection with the advance of the 4th French Army on its left, forced the Germans to retreat on a broad front to the east. It has fought and marched and endured the rigor of campaign with the most superb indifference to everything except the determination to go forward and imprint upon the enemy the marks of its courage and resolution. All arms and services, these in advance who smashed the way, and those in aid who rendered aggressive and efficient service, and those in the rear who by their untiring industry made possible the continued advance, are worthy of the highest praise and the gratitude of their admiring country. The Army Commander is proud of such an Army, thanks it for the splendid results already achieved, and looks with confidence to the still greater successes that lie before it.'

"Notify promptly all concerned by command of Lieut. General Liggett.
Signed: DRUMM, 1:23 p. m."

G. O. 25, 5th U. S. Army Corps, 1918:

"The announcement of a general armistice with the enemy brings to a temporary suspension the brilliant advance of the Fifth Corps, which commenced November 1st. The Corps Commander therefore takes this occasion to congratulate the Officers and Soldiers of the troops engaged with the Corps upon the fortitude, the courage, the endurance, the skill, and the determination which have characterized their conduct throughout the operations. The Corps Commander further desires to express his gratitude for the loyalty with which the troops have responded to every demand that has been made upon them, and to assure them of the deep sense of his pride and the honor that has come to him in commanding such superb organizations.

"Commending November 1st the troops of this Corps have advanced more than thirty kilometers against the strongest opposition that the enemy could offer by his best troops. They have broken through the last vestige of the Hindenburg line and the Freya Stellung, captured many prisoners, numerous guns, large quantities of war material, and have dispersed and destroyed the enemy organizations. On the very night preceding the armistice the troops of this Corps made a brilliant passage of the River Meuse, and occupied the high ground constituting a bridge head to the east of that River.

"Notwithstanding the fact that since the last days of August these troops have been constantly marching and fighting, sleeping in the open, and even at times going without the regular supplies of food, and subjected to rain, cold, and exposure in the mud, there has been no thought of complaining, but with a singleness of purpose they have devoted themselves to the great mission that developed upon them. By their progress they have contributed immeasurably to the total defeat of the enemy, and compelling him to sue for terms. Prior to the advance the Corps Commander took occasion to assure the troops that great results must follow upon their action, and they must expect to capture large numbers of prisoners and booty. The success in compelling the enemy to sue for peace has been beyond our greatest expectations. History will accord to the troops of this Corps their abundant share in the fruits of victory. All officers and soldiers who participated in this campaign must feel a just pride in the privilege that came to them, and the place that they must occupy in the gratitude and affection of our people.

"To those of our comrades who have laid down their lives, or who have suffered wounds and sickness, we and our nation will ever accord those sentiments of reverence and honor that they have justly earned.

"Not the least of the burdens of this campaign have devolved upon the Trains, Supply Departments, and all accessory Services, who with a determination and a self-sacrificing spirit have accepted the almost insurmountable difficulties of transportation, and of road conditions, in keeping the troops supplied with food and ammunition, without which the campaign would have been impossible.

"While such abundant results have crowned our efforts, we must accept them as only partial accomplishment of our tasks. During the existence of the armistice every Officer and Soldier must exercise the same alertness and the same attitude toward the enemy as existed during active hostilities. There has been no peace, but merely a suspension of fire action. The enemy of our country and of our troops must be expected at any moment to take advantage of any situation that might be offered to renew hostilities. It must be remembered that up to the last moment he opposed our advance with the greatest determination, inflicting casualties upon our troops, and that he now stands the most rigorous discipline, and extreme self-control, must be exercised every moment by all Officers and Soldiers. It must be made plain to all that intercourse with the enemy is an act of treason, and is punishable by death. Under no circumstances will any officers or soldiers communicate with the enemy, other than is provided by the laws of war under a flag of truce. Any hostile act on the part of the enemy will be met by a like hostile act, and the enemy approaching our lines must be treated exactly as is required under conditions of active hostilities. All troops must be placed in immediate readiness to resume the advance, and, if necessary, to attack on the enemy's position. They must be prepared to endure long marches, great fatigue, and much privation. The war is not ended, but is merely undergoing one of the phases by which we intend to bring it to a successful conclusion, and to restore peace and happiness to the world. The superb conduct of the troops in this campaign is a guaranty that they will continue to respond under all vicissitudes until their great mission is completed.

"By command of Major General Summerall.
Signed: W. B. BURRT,
Brigadier General, Chief of Staff."

G. O. 8t, 89th Division, 1918:

"In leaving the 89th Division to assume command of the First Corps, I want to thank the officers and men for their splendid support and loyal service throughout the recent operations.

"You have won a reputation which my praise can not increase. I am proud to have been your commander.

Signed: W. M. WRIGHT,
Major General, U. S. A., Commanding."

Telegram, G. H. Q. to 5th Corps, 1918:

"The following General Order of November 12th is telegraphed for your information. Inform Divisions: 'The enemy has capitulated. It is fitting that I address myself in thanks directly to the officers and soldiers of the American Expeditionary Forces who by their heroic efforts have made possible this glorious result. Our armies, hurriedly raised and hastily trained, met a veteran enemy, and by courage, discipline and skill always defeated him. Without complaint you have endured incessant toil, privation and danger. You have seen many of your comrades make the supreme sacrifice that freedom may live. I thank you for the patience and courage with which you have endured. I congratulate you upon the splendid fruits of victory which your heroism and the blood of our gallant dead are now presenting to our nation. Your deeds will live forever on the most glorious pages of American history. Those things you have done. There remains now a harder task which will test your soldierly qualities to the utmost. Succeed in this and little note will be taken and few praises will be sung; fail, and the light of your glorious achievements of the past will sadly be dimmed. But you will not fail. Every natural tendency may urge towards relaxation in discipline, in conduct, in appearance, in everything that marks the soldier. Yet you will remember that each officer and each soldier is the representative in Europe of his people and that his brilliant deeds of yesterday permit no action of today to pass unnoticed by friend or by foe. You will meet this test as gallantly as you have met the tests of the battlefield. Sustained by your high ideals and inspired by the heroic part you have played, you will carry back to our people the proud consciousness of a new Americanism born of sacrifice. Whether you stand on hostile territory or on the friendly soil of France, you will so bear yourself in discipline, appearance, and respect for all civil rights that you will confirm for all time the pride and love which every American feels for your uniform and for you.

Signed: PERSHING.'
Signed: DAVIS, 11:02 p. m."

Letter, 2nd U. S. Division, 1918:

"My dear General:

"I am enclosing herewith several copies of orders in which reference is made to organizations belonging to the 89th Division.

Signed: JOHN A. LEJEUNE,
Major General, U. S. M. C."

Order, 2nd U. S. Division, 1918:

"On the night of November 10th, heroic deeds were done by heroic men. In the face of a heavy artillery and withering machine gun fire, the 2nd Engineers threw two foot bridges across the MEUSE and the first and second battalions of the 5th Marines crossed resolutely and unflinchingly to the east bank and carried out their mission.

"In the last battle of the war, as in all others in which this Division has participated, it enforced its will on the enemy.

Signed: JOHN A. LEJEUNE,
Major General, U. S. M. C., Commanding."

Order, 2nd U. S. Division, 1918:

"In the crossing of the MEUSE on the night of November 10th, Companies 'G' and 'H', 9th Infantry, assisted the 2nd Engineers in throwing the bridges across the river. The 8th and 23rd Machine Gun Companies (Marine) accompanied the 1st and 2nd Battalions of the 5th Marines in their crossing; the 2nd Battalion, 356th Infantry (89th Division), and Company 'C', of the 342nd Machine Gun Battalion (89th Division), crossed immediately after the above mentioned organizations; and, at dawn, the 1st Battalion of the 9th Infantry, accompanied by Company 'D' of the 5th Machine Gun Battalion, moved forward to the east bank in support of the advanced force.

"The names of the officers and men of these organizations belong on the roll of heroic men who did heroic deeds in the last battle of the war.

Signed: JOHN A. LEJEUNE,
Major General, U. S. M. C., Commanding."

Letter, from Commanding General, 89th Division to Commanding General, 178th Infantry Brigade, 1918:

"The enclosed orders from the Commanding General, 2nd Division, relative to the operations, night of November 10-11, are enclosed for the 356th Infantry and 342nd Machine Gun Battalion.

"The action of your brigade in this operation was most commendable. The part played by Major Hanna's battalion and company of the Machine Gun Battalion, while not under your direct orders, was gallantly performed according to the best standards of the division. Their heavy losses, including the life of Major Hanna, shows the desperate character of their engagement. That they were successful shows that in our last battle of the campaign the spirit of the division was well carried out.

Signed: FRANK L. WINN,
Major General, U. S. A."

G. O. No. 26, Hdq. 5th A. C., 1918:

"The following citations are anncunced:

"The 89th Division, preceding the attack of November 1st, cleaned up the difficult and strongly hold BOIS de BANTHEVILLE and attacked on November 1st. It broke through the enemy's lines advanced strongly day and night, defeating the enemy and his reserve in its front, and drove him across the MEUSE. Under heavy fire and against stubborn resistance, it constructed bridges and established itself on the heights. The cessation of hostilities found this Division holding strong positions across the MEUSE and ready for a continuation of the advance.

Signed: C. F. SUMMERALL,
Major General, Commanding."

G. O. No. 232, G. H. Q., A. E. F., 1918:

"It is with a sense of gratitude for its splendid accomplishment, which will live through all history, that I record in General Orders a tribute to the victory of the First Army in the Meuse-Argonne battle.

"Tested and strengthened by the reduction of the St. Mihiel salient, for more than six weeks you battered against the pivot of the enemy line on the western front. It was a position of imposing natural strength, stretching on both sides of the Meuse River from the bitterly contested hills of Verdun to the almost impenetrable forest of the Argonne; a position, moreover, fortified by four years of labor designed to render it impregnable; a position held with the fullest resources of the enemy. That position you broke utterally, and thereby hastened the collapse of the enemy's military power.

"Soldiers of all the divisions engaged under the First, Third and Fifth Corps—the 89th—you will be long remembered for the stubborn persistence of your progress, your storming of obstinately defended machine gun nests, your penetration, yard by yard, of woods and ravines, your hercic resistance in the face of counter-attacks supported by powerful artillery fire. For more than a month, from the initial attack of September 26, you fought your way slowly thru the Argonne, thru the woods and over the hills west of the Meuse; you slowly enlarged your hold on the Cotes de Meuse to the east; and then, on the first of November, your attack forced the enemy into flight. Pressing his retreat, you cleared the entire left bank of the Meuse south of Sedan, and then stormed the heights on the right bank and drove him into the plain beyond.

"Your achievement, which is scarcely to be equalled in American history, must remain a source of proud satisfaction to the troops who participated in the last campaign of the war. The American people will remember it as the realization of the hitherto potential strength of the American contribution toward the cause to which they had sworn allegiance. There can be no greater reward for a soldier or for a soldier's memory.

Signed: JOHN J. PERSHING,
General, Commander in Chief,
American Expeditionaty Forces."

After advancing srom and leaving the Lucey Sector, the Division was commended for its behavior the first night it was under fire as follows:

G. O. Hdq. 89th Division, 1918:

"Report of the Battalion Commander, 1st Battalion, 354th Infantry, and of the Inspectors of the 8th French Army recently submitted to the Division Commander, invite attention to the courage and fortitude of the personnel of the 1st Battalion, 354th Infantry, and the 1st Battalion, 355th Infantry, on the night of August 7-8, during the gas attack by the Germans on the center regimental zones of the Lucey Sector.

"This attack was made during the period of the relief of the 82nd Division by the 89th Division. In most instances it was the first night the troops had been in the line; in practically every instance it was the first time the personnel had been under fire.

"The orders in force at the time required troops of the advanced post position to hold that position to the death unless withdrawal was ordered by the Army Commander. This order was faithfully carried out in spite of the intensity of the attack and the helplessness of the troops to retaliate. It was an example of courage and steadfastness deserving the highest praise and the spirit of the troops was further indicated by the fact that they requested to remain in the line and finish their tour of duty when relief was proposed.

"The Division Commander commends the officers and men of these battalions.

"This order will be read at the first assembly of each organization after its receipt.

"By command of Major General Wright.
Signed: C. E. KILBOURNE,
Colonel, General Staff,
Chief of Staff."

The following interesting data regarding the 89th AMERICAN DIVISION is furnished:

From August 6, 1918 (when the Division finished its five week's training in France), to November 11th, 11 a. m., 1918, covering a period of ninety-eight days, the 89th AMERICAN DIVISION was continuously holding an active front line sector, except from October 9th to October 19th, when it moved from the ST. MIHIEL to the ARGONNE-MEUSE sector.

In addition it was a FRONT LINE ATTACKING DIVISION and took part in the American Army's two major operations, namely, ST. MIHIEL and the FINAL PHASE OF THE ARGONNE-MEUSE OFFENSIVE.

After these operations the Division not only held the sector that it had advanced thru, but took over sectors of flank front line attacking divisions that had been put in line just for the offensive. The Division then organized these large sectors, held them, prepared them for further advance and advanced further from them.

The below itemized table of casualties shows some startling facts as follows:

1. The casualties from September 18th to October 9th when the line was held after the ST. MIHIEL offensive are 1,483 and greater than the casualties during the ST. MIH1EL offensive which were 1,008.

2. The casualties, August 7-8, the first night in the line in the ST. MIHIEL sector during the heavy shelling and gas attack when the orders were "For every unit to hold their posts until the death" total 623 against 1,008 for the ST. MIHIEL offensive.

3. The casualties from October 19th to October 22nd in attacking and mopping up the BOIS de BANTHEVILLE, which was reported cleared of the enemy except for a few machine gun nests, total 442, against 1,646 casualties in the final phase of the ARGONNE-MEUSE offensive.

4. The casualties from twenty hours, November 11th, then the MEUSE was crossed, total 362, against 1,646 for the final phase of the ARGONNE-MEUSE offensive.

5. The casualties in holding the line in the BOIS de BANTHEVILLE from October 22nd to November 1st were 557 and those for holding the line along the River MEUSE from November 6th to November 10th were 571 against 1,646 for the final phase of the ARGONNE-MEUSE offensive.

HONOR ROLL

Onec during its tour of duty in the ST. MIHIEL seetor and twiee during the ARGONNE-MEUSE drive, the Corps Commander, thinking that the division had done its duty in holding the line and in reaching its objectives, wished to withdraw it from the line and send it to a rest area. General Wright, the Division Commander, spokc for himsclf and for the offieers and men of thc Division, stating that the division did not wish to be withdrawn, but desired to continue.

The rcsult is that thc 89th Amerieaη Division aftcr it onee went into aetive service in thc line nevei was in "A Rest Area."

The number of deeorations that have beεn awarded to mcmbers of the Division are as follows:

Congrcssional Medal of Honor	8
Distinguished Service Crosses	104
Belgian War Crosses	2
Distinguished Service Medals	2
Croix de Guerre	55

On November 24, 1918, the Division as a member of the Third Amerieaη Army, Seventh Corps, advaneed into Germany as a part of the Army of Oecupation, proceeding thru Belgium and Luxemburg.

While in Germany the Division oeeupied, direeted the eivil affairs, and guarded the largest area of any Division in the Amerieaη Army of Oeeupation. This area at its extreme points was 37 miles wide and 68 miles long, including four Kreise, namely: Prum, Bitburg, Trierland and Saarburg with the Luxemburg border (60 miles long) on the west.

Ever sinee the Division was organized at CAMP FUNSTON, KANSAS, General Wood and General Winn, the Division Commanders, have insisted upon an aetive athletic poliey with the result that all branches of athleties have been partieipated in thruout the year by all members of the Command.

In addition to the above, Division football, baseball, traek and other teams have always been in competition and rated high in comparison with other divisions.

The full benefit of this poliey was realized and appreciated by the Division when on Mareh 29, 1919, the 89th AMERICAN DIVISION Football Team WON THE CHAMPIONSHIP OF THE AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES by defeating the 36th Amerieaη Division, First Army Football Team by the seore of 14 to 6 at Paris, Franee.

Prior to this, the team had defeated teams of all its opponents in the Army of Oeeupation in Germany and of the First Army and S. O. S. in Paris.

The Division Commanders, in addition to insisting upon and advoeating a strong athletic policy, also maintained at all times an aetive and effieient edueational poliey, both for training men for eommissions as offieers (the Third Officer's Training Camp at CAMP FUNSTON was rated one of the best at any of the army eamps in the United States) and for primary edueation, trades and professions. The foundations of this system were seen in Germany where the following sehools were in operation:

1. Primary school.
2. Liberal Arts school.
3. Agricultural sehool.
4. Engineering sehool.
5. Trade sehool.

In August, 1918, when the 89th Amerieaη Division went into the line, it was found that some means of identifying individuals and baggage was neeessary, as all possible means of identification had been removed. It was at this time that the sleeve insignia, designed by Col. John C. H. Lee, Chief of Staff, and deseribed below, was first won.

The sleeve insignia is a "Blaek 'W' in a Blaek Cirele." It was selected after eareful eonsideration and has a meaning whieh is as follows:

The Division comes from the Middle West and its insignia indicates its Western origin and all around efficieney; inverted, it indieates the Middle part of the name; on its side, it indieates "Sigma," the symbol of summation—that is, co-ordination or single effort. Moreover, the eirele is that geometrieal figure whieh ean eome to stability in any position, yet move rapidly in answer to a ehange of forces. In the lower part of the "W" is plaeed the eolor of the braneh of the serviee, sueh as blue for Infantry, ete.
